Suddenly one of the party began to relate an anecdote of a ghost he had seen on an evening like this. The plan was successful. Several tales followed, but the young daughter of the house, Anna, continued to ask for more. It was so amusing to hear these marvellous stories, imagine the white and black specters, moving noiselessly in dense shadow or dazzling moonlight, feel a strange horror chill her blood and then lean against her mother, finding safety in her embrace. She could not endure Candidate Holst's way of taking these stories, his scornful comments tore ugly rents in the dreamy veil in which she wrapped herself.

He was a medical student and had witnessed many similar things in the hospital. It was owing to sickness acting upon different individuals. Either the patient, when his imagination was excited, mistook a towel, on which the moon was shining, for a phantom, and the shrieking of the wind in old houses for ghostly cries and the clank of chains, or the whole affair was pure hallucination. A person in a healthy, normal condition never saw ghosts.

The whole party opposed his view. There was surely some truth at the bottom of all these tales. There was a thousand things which could not be explained by natural causes.

Anna was warmly seconded by Holst's younger brother Hector, who had arrived at the house with him this morning; though he was influenced more by courtesy to the pretty young girl than because he felt any fear of ghosts. He could not bear to have his brother appear to place himself in such contemptuous opposition to a pair of such beautiful bright eyes, so he fought a stout battle against his own convictions.

"The history of such things," said the Candidate, "is contrary to sound sense and reason. They are miserable relics of the darkness of the Middle Ages, which can only check progress. It would be an utterly idiotic proceeding for dead folk to walk abroad and terrify the living. Tradition carries such tales from generation to generation, and if not subjected to severe scientific criticism they retain their vitality and are believed. It is the same kind of superstition as that which makes simple folk afraid to sit thirteen at table. In nine cases out of ten, nothing happens, and there isn't even one person who thinks of the matter. In the tenth, perhaps, one of the company dies, which is certainly in accordance with the course of nature. Instantly it is said: 'You remember; you remember, we sat thirteen at table that day.' So the superstition obtains nourishment for a long time. No, thank God, the fresh breeze of knowledge will sweep away all such things like dank, unwholesome fogs."

"Yes, we old people must be pardoned," the mistress of the house gently interposed, "we don't come so much in contact with the fresh breeze of science as perhaps we ought. We live, they say, wholly in tradition, and this thrives nowhere so well as in an old manor like this. It is very difficult to release ourselves from the ideas in which we were reared, and which our ancestors believed. I am far from what is called superstitious; I have never been in contact with these strange spirits—yet not for all the world would I sleep in the blue chamber."

"The blue chamber!" cried the whole party in tones of astonishment.

"Yes, we have here, as in so many old manor houses, a room that is said to be haunted. Many hundred years ago a man was murdered there, and since then ghosts have taken possession of it. The servants talk of strange sounds and sights; none of them like to pass it after dark."

"I was sitting thinking that I should be delighted to occupy a real haunted chamber," said Holst quietly. "It is a sin to have it remain unused forever. Perhaps I can help dispel this foolish superstition, for I am convinced I shall sleep undisturbed."

At first the mistress of the house would not listen to such a plan, but when the whole party urged and Anna clasped her arms beseechingly around her neck she at last yielded.

Anna thought the scheme wonderfully interesting.

"It is really terrible that you dare venture. Candidate Holst," she said, "but I hope you will look really frightened when you come to breakfast in the morning."

After supper the whole party went to the "blue chamber," which meantime had been put in order to receive the guest. Every corner was examined with the utmost care.

The atmosphere was somewhat oppressive, though the windows were now open. The room was seldom ventilated, and the half moldy air took the liberty of settling in the furniture and curtains. It had evidently always borne the name of the "blue chamber," although the thick carpet was now faded. The furniture was very scanty, but what articles remained were old-fashioned. While time had transformed everything else in the ancient manor, making the stiff carved chairs give way to comfortable armchairs, and the old chimney-place to tile stoves, this room seemed to have preserved its former appearance. It was delivered over to the spirits of the past; none had attempted to drag it into the present. An article that did not contribute least in enabling it to retain its ancient character was the huge, exquisitely carved four-post bedstead, which occupied a large portion of the room. The apartment was the last in one wing of the manor, looking out upon the grove, but so near the ground that a person, by the display of some little agility, might climb up.

"It is not impossible," said Holst, after a thorough examination of the chamber, "that the nocturnal noises mentioned may have been made by vagabonds who settled themselves here for a comfortable night's rest. Victor, do me the favor to get my pistols; they are in my traveling satchel; but don't meddle with the triggers, they are loaded."

Victor went away with a light, and soon after brought the pistols to his brother. The latter primed them freshly, put on new caps and laid them on the table.

"Now, good night, ladies and gentlemen, I wish you all as comfortable a rest as I expect to have myself."

"Good night, wicked Freethinker," said Anna half admiringly. "I hope you will have different opinions in the morning."

As they went out Victor whispered to Anna: "I'll answer for it that he shall be thoroughly frightened."

The door was locked and Candidate Holst remained alone in the blue chamber. The sound of footsteps and voices died away; he listened at the door but all was still.

Going to the window he stood there a few minutes looking at the grove. The soft night breeze stirred the leaves and branches. Only the nearest trees could be dimly distinguished. Beyond all was dense, impenetrable darkness, for there was neither moon nor stars in the sky.

"It's really very rare to be free from Madam Luna," said he, "she is so fond of intruding and playing the spy on sensible folk, spite of drawn curtains. For the rest, this is an uncommonly comfortable room. Probably not one of the whole party will have so good a bed to lie in as my lucky self.

"So a man was murdered here, and for the sake of this legend the room has now stood empty hundreds of years. If one could see a few blood stains or similar horrors—but there's no trace of anything of the sort. What matchless power superstition has, even in our enlightened days! I shall consider it a good deed to drive it from this comfortable stronghold."

Lighting a cigar, he paced to and fro smoking, then walked around the bed and closed his eyes with a half shudder. "How timidly the young girl, Anna, is pressing her pretty face against the pillow at the thought that any human being dares to sleep in the blue chamber. She won't even venture to put out her night-lamp for fear of seeing the frightful white shape that must speedily come up here and destroy me."

While thus soliloquizing he undressed, opened the canopied bed, and resolutely extinguished the lamp.

There was no sound in the room; only it seemed as though he could hear a rustling noise like crickets and a mysterious ticking, as though the famous deathwatch was under the carpet. He lay listening a moment, heard the night wind sigh through the trees and the great clock of the manor strike eleven, then he fell asleep.

At the end of an hour he suddenly started up in bed, having heard a sound like the opening of a door. A strange, shuddering sensation ran through his limbs as he stared fixedly into the room and beheld a white form moving slowly towards the bed.

Terror overpowered him, but the next instant he regained his coolness, and shouted in a firm voice, "Who's there?"

No answer, but the shape remained standing in the middle of the floor.

"Who's there? Answer, or as sure as I live I'll fire," he called again, cocking his pistol.

He was once more the quiet, cold-blooded physician; he had surely heard the creaking of a door; it must be a man, a rascal, a murderer perhaps, but no spectre.

Yet, spite of the pistol's warning snap, the figure did not move.

"Who goes there?" he called again. Still no sound disturbed the silence of the room.

The physician stretched out his arm and fired.

A flash of light illumined the dusky chamber and the report shook the old tapestry. Scarcely had the sound died away when a burst of discordant, jeering, fiendish laughter greeted him, and something hard struck his forehead. It was the bullet.

Seized with terrible dread, he fired the other pistol at the motionless white form—again the frightful laughter echoed through the room and the bullet fell heavily back on his own breast.

With a loud shriek he sank down on the bed.

The form glided noiselessly out of the door.

Early the next morning, while Anna was watering her flowers, Victor came up to her.

"Where is your brother?" she asked.

"He isn't up yet, poor fellow. He has had a terrible fright."

"What was it?"

"If you'll promise to keep silence I'll tell the whole story. To revenge myself on him I played ghost, first taking care to draw the bullets from his pistols that he might not use the weapons recklessly. Wrapped in sheets I visited him and threw the balls back at his head when he fired."

"Nothing could be better!" exclaimed Anna. "But promise me not to speak of it. Your mother might be vexed and he himself must not be undeceived." "Trust me; I'll be as mute as the grave." The physician did not come; breakfast waited in vain. At last some of the gentlemen went to wake him. He lay with his head stretched over the edge of the bed; his mouth was wide open, his eyes were starting from their sockets and his hair was as white as chalk. Life had vanished. His discharged pistols were found by his side. One week later Victor was taken to the insane asylum.—N. Y. Graphic.

OWLS.

Owls were never an epicurean feast, but southey once had an owl roasted for dinner, for himself and Mr. and Mrs. Wordsworth; I give the sequel in his own words:

"We agreed there could be no pretext for making owls game and killing them as delicacies; but if ever you eat one, by all means try it boiled, with onion sauce."

An omelet made of owl's eggs is said to be a cure for drunkenness.

At one time the workmen on the Washington Monument were a good deal annoyed to find that a plumb line that reached from the top to the bottom of the shaft was frequently meddled with. At last it was found that an owl had taken up its abode in a part of the shaft that afforded a shelter, and in passing in and out it had disturbed the line.

An owl was once beguiled into a Georgia conference meeting, intent on securing a rat that had run into the room to escape from so persistent an enemy. Dazzled by the light he sailed around a few times and alighted upon the bald head of an old man directly in front of the speaker. It is hardly necessary to say what was the next move, but the presence of the owl may have called to the preacher's mind the presence of Isaiah, who, when he foretold the desolation of Babylon, declared that the house should be full of doleful creatures, and that owls should dwell there.

An owl once seriously disturbed the mourners at a funeral at Beechwood, Ontario. With tender care they had placed the remains in a tomb, and were turning away sorrowing, when they heard a "moan" that seemed to come from the coffin. Hurriedly they broke the casket open, only to find all quiet within, and then it was discovered that the noise they had heard came from owls at the far end of the vault.

Dodsley thought it worth his while to write an ode on the death of an owl, and Broomfield made the bird the subject of his muse. Many persons believe that an owl will keep his eyes so intently fixed on a person walking around him as to wring his own neck off, and it was not until some quick-eyed observer discovered that when the owl had turned his head half round, he whisked it back through the whole circle with the rapidity of lightning, and faced again the person who was experimenting on him.—Pewaukee Journal.

Wealth of the Ocean.

Sailing in the John Williams northeast of Lord Howe's Island, at dawn of December 19th last, the ocean swarmed with small fish resembling sprats. Sea birds hovered above, gorging to their hearts' content. Shortly afterward shoals of bonito (Thynnus pelamys) came along in hot pursuit. With half a dozen pearl oyster-hooks, and no bait whatever, in less than an hour we caught one hundred and sixteen bonito, the greater part of which was salted down. Throughout the day we were slowly sailing through a countless multitude of bonito. After Captain Turpie had desired the fishers to cease their occupation (as our salt was done), one or two furtively and cruelly amused themselves by catching these fine fish and throwing them back alive into the ocean. We might easily have caught a couple of thousand before sunset. Throughout the following night the sea was illuminated; for as the bonito rushed through the water near the surface they became phosphorescent—a sight never to be forgotten by those who witnessed it. Toward daybreak, however, a strong breeze sprang up, and we saw no more of those moving masses of fire. The bonito belongs to the mackeral family. It is usually thirty inches in length and twenty inches round; and of a steel-blue color, with four stripes along each side. The flesh is of a dark color, and proved an acceptable change of diet to all on board.—W. Wyatt Gill.

The Rewards of Health.

To recreate the body three things are necessary—to sweat, to pant, to feel the heart leap. Let no languid women or effeminate men deceive themselves. If they seek firm flesh, clear eyes and skin, a lion's heart and the carriage of an Arab, they must discommode themselves. The rewards of health are not for sluggards. When athletes, who now number among them most men and some women, dry their pores, they know that the wet and the heat are signs that they are burning and washing waste matter from their bodies. When they exhale their deep breaths, they know that the same process is going on, and that, too, their blood is being renewed. And when their leaping pulses prove that the rich fluid is taking new life to their remotest toe and finger tips, they know the victory is theirs. The blouse and short skirt are not fairly matched against drapery trailed upon piazzas and Prince Alberts displayed in club windows. The prizes of life which can be won go to the physically fit. Whether it is a question of fun, or work, or irritation, dawdlers, dudes and æsthetes, male or female, are not "in it" with those who are masters of their powers. We have no quarrel with those of a different mind. To us the game is seen worth the candle.—N. Y. Times.

—Another industry is now open to women. In an establishment on Center street, New York, they are employed as gold beaters. The proprietor asserts that while not equal to men in physical strength they are superior in carefulness and delicacy of workmanship.—N. Y. Sun.

was the first preparation perfectly adapted to cure diseases of the scalp, and the first successful restorer of faded or gray hair to its natural color, growth, and youthful beauty. It has had many imitators, but none have so fully met all the requirements needful for the proper treatment of the hair and scalp. HALL'S HAIR RENEWER has steadily grown in favor, and spread its fame and usefulness to every quarter of the globe. Its unparalleled success can be attributed to but one cause: the entire fulfillment of its promises.

The proprietors have often been surprised at the receipt of orders from remote countries, where they had never made an effort for its introduction.

The use for a short time of HALL'S HAIR RENEWER wonderfully improves the personal appearance. It cleanses the scalp from all impurities, cures all humors, fever, and dryness, and thus prevents baldness. It stimulates the weakened glands, and enables them to push forward a new and vigorous growth. The effects of this article are not transient, like those of alcoholic preparations, but remain a long time, which makes its use a matter of economy.

My health has been such that for some years past I have been obliged to take a tonic of some kind in the spring, and have never found anything that hit my wants as your Sarsaparilla. It tones up my system, purifies my blood, sharpens my appetite, and seems to make me over. Respectfully yours,

THE COTTON CROP.

The Drouth, Rust and Excessive Rains Have Done Immense Damage to the Growing Plants.

The International Meridian Congress Unable to Agree Upon a Prime Meridian—Secretary Teller Leaves for Colorado.

CROP REPORT.

WASHINGTON, October 7.—The cotton crop report for the Memphis district, embracing West Tennessee, North Mississippi, North Arkansas and North Alabama, to be issued to-morrow by Messrs. Hill, Fontaine & Co., will say: "The weather during the month of September has been unfavorable to the growing cotton crop. The hot dry weather, which was a continuance of the drouth extending back through August, prevailed throughout the district until the 20th of September, when excessive rains fell, principally in Arkansas and Tennessee. The drouth had materially affected the plant and the rains which subsequently fell in many localities added to the damage already sustained. The favorable prospects indicated in the July report, which at that time promised an increased yield in this district, have been changed. Cotton in the main has not fruited well, neither has the plant retained its square bolls. From all over the district serious damage is reported from the drouth, rust and excessive rains. These have caused a general revision of the prospective yield which as now indicated will be 17½ per cent. less than last year. The weather since these reports were furnished has been more seasonable, and a continuance of the favorable conditions, together with the late frost, will improve a large proportion of the growing crop, especially in the bottoms, which would reduce the per centage of decrease and probably make the yield in the Memphis district approximate that of last year. Corn has not suffered to the same extent as cotton and there will be ample raised to more than supply the demands of this section of the country.

MERIDIAN CONGRESS.

The International Meridian Congress reconvened at the State Department at noon yesterday and resumed discussion of the resolution proposing to select Greenwich as the prime meridian. The French delegates still insist upon Paris as the prime meridian. Members of the Congress say they are no nearer reaching an agreement than they were on the day they met, and owing to the opposition of the French delegates to Greenwich, doubt whether any agreement will be reached. If it were not for this opposition unanimous action recommending that the line pass through Greenwich might soon be taken.

CAPITAL NOTES.

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs has made arrangements for the removal of the Tonkawa Indians from Texas to the Iowa reservation in the Indian Territory.

Secretary Teller left Washington last night for New York, where he will visit the President for a day or two. He will then go to Colorado and expects to return to Washington in about a month. The annual report of the bureau officers of the Interior Department will soon be ready, but the Secretary has decided not to give them to the public until after his return from his western trip.

Suicide of an Immigrant.

NEW YORK, October 7.—An immigrant named Christopher Friedel, committed suicide on the North German Lloyd steamer Frilda, during her recent voyage from Bremen. She left there on September 24. When two hours out Friedel jumped overboard. A boat was lowered and the man was rescued but in an unconscious condition. He was placed in the steerage hospital where he was resuscitated after considerable difficulty. Shortly before the ship reached Southampton and while Friedel was in the hospital he asked the attendant to call his wife. The attendant was not gone more than five minutes, but on his return he found Friedel suspended from the ceiling by his suspenders. He had hanged himself and when discovered was dead. He leaves a wife and seven children. Mrs. Friedel has 2,000 marks with her and has a balance of 4,500 marks with her banker in Germany. She says she was well to do when Friedel married her, and that she had supported him since. They had started for Marietta, Ohio, where they were to have settled on a farm. When Friedel learned that his wife had brought but 2,000 marks with her the vessel was leaving Bremen. He expostulated with her and finally became frantic, it was then he made the first attempt at suicide.

Funeral of Frank Chanfrau.

LONG BRANCH, N. J., October 7.—A funeral long to be remembered in this place was that of Frank S. Chanfrau, the actor, which took place Sunday at one o'clock at his late home in Cedar Avenue. There was no attempt at display, and the services were the simple and impressive ritual of the Episcopal Church, but on every hand there was the most abundant signs of a deep and widespread sorrow for the loss of a man whose life has been exemplary in every respect and whose sterling good qualities have endeared him to everyone. The pallbearers were John W. Albaugh, manager of the Holiday Street Theater, Baltimore; William Henderson, Charles Gaylor, J. H. McVicker, Ham C. Glenn, Oliver Dowd Byron, E. L. Tilton and Dr. J. A. Pemberton.

The Fraudulent Louisville Distillers in Canada.

DETROIT, October 7.—It is now definitely known that Andrew and George C. Buchanan, the fraudulent Louisville, Ky., distillers, who so mysteriously disappeared from that city about September 31 last, are quietly sojourning in Windsor, Ont., opposite Detroit, and that they are contemplating the establishment of a distillery or a large liquor store in that city, providing the necessary licenses can be obtained from the Canadian Government.

Trades and Labor Organization.

CHICAGO, October 7.—Delegates are arriving to attend the annual convention of the Federated Trade and Labor Organization of the United States and Canada, which begins here to-day. The delegates will be welcomed in addresses by the Hon. Julius Grinnell and the President of the Trades Union. There will be a banquet Thursday evening and a public meeting Friday, at which the question of convict labor will be discussed. Four hundred delegates are pected.

Twenty-Six Cows Burned to Death.

BENNINGTON, Vt., October 7.—On Saturday evening a large barn belonging to Warren Clemens of West Dorset, was struck by lightning and totally destroyed. In it were 100 tons of hay and twenty-six cows; all perished.

THE DOMINION.

Sir John McDonald Gone to Europe for Aid for the Canadian Pacific—The Windsor Hotel Burned.

QUEBEC, October 7.—Sir John McDonald has put a definite conclusion to the controversy respecting the location of the eastern extension to the Atlantic of the Canadian Pacific Railroad. The Premier made known yesterday his reasons for declaring that Quebec shall be the summer port and Halifax the winter port of the railway. He says the Dominion has expended millions of dollars in constructing the Canadian Pacific north of Lake Superior which might have been saved but for the determination to avoid the territory of the United States, and to be consistent the Government cannot now yield to the determined efforts of the syndicate to secure the subsidy in Quebec province and the State of Maine to Portland, thus diverting Canadian trade to an American seaport.

MONTREAL, October 7.—Sir John MacDonald, the Canadian Premier, and George Stephen, President of the Canada Pacific Railroad, left yesterday for New York to take the Cunard Steamer for England, with the support of the Dominion Government. Mr. Stephen proposes to establish a line of steamers in connection with the Canada Pacific road between British Columbia and China and Japan. Mr. Stephen says the steamers will be much finer than those sailing from San Francisco, and that the route from Yokohama to Europe, via the Canadian Pacific, will be shorter by three days than by San Francisco. Mr. Stephen will also make financial arrangements for building the Manitoba and Southwestern and other Canadian Pacific branch lines in the Northwest.

KINGSTON, October 7.—The Windsor Hotel was entirely destroyed by fire before daylight yesterday morning, the guests narrowly escaping with their lives. George McMahon, a telegraph operator, jumped from a third-story window and had his leg broken. A female servant was severely burned. The loss is estimated at $40,000. An explosion of gas caused the fire.

FIRE IN A COPPER MINE.

Eleventh Level of the Calumet and Hecla Mine on Fire—Three Men Suffocated—Several Others Injured.

HANCOCK, Mich., October 7.—Saturday night fire was discovered in an idle portion of the Hecla branch of the Calumet and Hecla mine in the eleventh level, between Nos. 3 and 4 shafts, where, for several years, wooden wedges from timber were made. The accumulation of chips and shavings, partly saturated with oil, through some unknown cause, became ignited. Several men sent down Saturday night to use the hose were driven back by the smoke. Thomas Gribble was suffocated and could not be rescued.

Sunday morning, John Rapson, with three other volunteers, descended to examine the pumps and attempt to recover Gribble's body. After going a short distance they were driven back. Rapson was overcome. He was seen to fall back, but his comrades could not return to him. Other volunteers, among them R. Berryman, descended to rescue Rapson's body. Three men were overcome, Berryman made strenuous efforts to save his comrades. He ran to the shaft for air, and returning threw the three men into the car. Then he ran out for more air, and returned and rang the bell. The car raised the three unconscious men. Berryman was almost exhausted. The recovery of the third is doubtful.

There is danger of the fire reaching the tramway, which is saturated with oil and may conduct the fire to the other level. The extent or progress of the fire is unknown. The mine is filled with smoke. The shafts are being closed to prevent a draft. Great fear and excitement prevails. This is the first underground fire in the Lake Superior copper mines, and the first suspension of work in this great copper producer since the strike of 1873. The mine is heavily timbered with pine, which is very inflammable. A large gang have descended to fight the fire.

John McCullough Going to Hot Springs.

ST. LOUIS, October 7.—John McCullough arrived here Sunday morning and went to the Southern Hotel, where he now remains the guest of John W. Norton, manager of the Grand Opera House. Mr. McCullough comes here at the invitation of Dr. J. M. Keller, of Hot Springs. He and McCullough were friends together in Louisville, and believing that a trip to the Springs would be a benefit to the tragedian, Keller invited him there and is to meet him in St. Louis to-day. If after the medical examination Mr. McCullough is found able to stand the trip to Hot Springs, Dr. Keller will take him there immediately. Mr. Norton says that Mr. McCullough shows no signs of softening of the brain and that he converses freely on all subjects. He believes a short season of rest and quiet will place the tragedian upon his feet again.

A Complicated Elopement.

BARRINGTON, N. H., October 7.—Five weeks ago Timothy Capen, a well-to-do farmer, disappeared in company with his son's mother-in-law, Mrs. William Freeman. Capen returned alone in eight days and Mrs. Freeman followed two days after. Both assert that there has been nothing unlawful in their intercourse and that their elopement was designed merely to remove Mrs. Freeman for a time from the cruelty of her husband. The outcome is an odd complication. Freeman sues Capen for $3,000 damages, while both Mrs. Capen and Mrs. Freeman have filed bills of divorce.

A Well-Known Editor to be Married.

WASHINGTON, October 7.—John R. McLean, editor and proprietor of the Cincinnati Enquirer, will be married this morning in this city to Miss Emily T. Beale, daughter of General E. F. Beale, of Washington. The wedding will be strictly private and in the presence of only the immediate relatives of the two families. Rev. William E. Leonard, of St. John's Episcopal Church, will officiate. Mr. McLean will leave at once for Ohio and take an active part in the campaign.

Convicted of Appropriating Postoffice Funds.

BALTIMORE, October 7.—In the United States District Court yesterday James C. Dougherty pleaded guilty to the charge of embezzling and converting to his own use certain money order funds, amounting to $3,335.84. He was sentenced to three years in jail and to pay a fine of $3,335.84. Dougherty was the clerk in the Baltimore Postoffice Money Department.

They Want Canadian Steamboat Captains.

OTTAWA, Ont., October 7.—In addition to the Canadian contingents sent to Egypt to join the Gordon relief expedition, the Imperial Government has cabled for eight steamboat captains used to light draft vessels to be sent over immediately to join the boatmen at Alexandria. The captains will sail from Quebec next Saturday for Liverpool.

The fault with most all cough preparations is that they contain morphia and are absolutely injurious to the stomach and nerves. That simple preparation of wild cherry bark, called Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, contains no morphia and yet will cure a cough or cold in less time than any other compound. It is the only reliable cure for consumption.

Help Yourself.

People who have been bolstered up and levered all their lives are seldom good for anything in a crisis. When misfortune comes they look around for something to cling to or leap upon. If the prop is not there, down they go.

Once down, they are as helpless as capsized turtles, or unhorsed men in armor, and cannot find their feet again without assistance.

Such silken fellows no more resemble self-made men, who have fought their way to position, making difficulties their stepping stones, and deriving determination from defeat, than vines resemble oaks, or sputtering rush-lights the stars of heaven. Efforts persisted into achievements train a man to self-reliance, and when he has proven to the world that he can trust himself the world will trust him.

It is unwise to deprive young men of the advantages which result from their own energetic action by "boosting them over obstacles which they ought to surmount alone.

Many who long suffered from urinary and digestive diseases, causing nervousness, weakness and debility, after trying bitters, kidney medicines, iron medicines, etc., without benefit, have found permanent relief in from one to three bottles of Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaprilla, the only perfect blood purifier and strengthener. Hundreds of letters to the proprietors have testified to its superiority over the many pretended cures so largely advertised by means of bogus certificates that are bought and paid for.

Astronomy is a beautiful science. We are told that if a railway was to run from the earth to the nearest fixed star, and the fare was one penny for every hundred miles, and if you were to take a mass of gold to the ticket-office equal to twice the national debt—or $3,800,000,000—it would not be sufficient to pay for a ticket to the nearest fixed star aforesaid. If this be the case, it matters very little to us whether such a railway is ever constructed. It would be discouraging to go to the ticket-office with a mass of gold equal to $3,800,000,000, and be informed that the fare was $5,678,032,000. If the ticket agent wouldn't trust until we got back, we'd be compelled to forego the trip.—Norristown Herald.

Woman's best friend for relieving the many pains and weaknesses incidental to female life, and one that gives rosy cheeks, brightens the eyes, checks every unnatural drain and creates a perfect picture of health and beauty, is Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla. It purifies the blood strengthens the female system, and removes all feeling of languor, distress, pimples, sores and weakness, producing dreamless slumber and painless regularity of natural functions.

In gathering wild flowers, autumn leaves, or picnicking in the woods, we are more or less exposed to danger from poisoning by ivory or other wild vines and shrubs. The poison is under certain circumstances readily absorbed by the blood, and painful swellings or eruptions are caused. Such affections Hood's Sarsaparilla readily cures, as it expels all impurities from the blood. Even in cases of poisoning by Paris green, Hood's Sarsaparilla has been remarkably successful. It should be kept constantly in the house for all blood disorders. Hood's Sarsaprilla is made by C. Hood & Co., Howell, Mass, and is sold by all druggists, 100 Doses $1.

The Fountain of Youth.

Dyspepsia is the prevailing malady of civilized life. A weak dyspeptic stomach acts very slowly or not at all on many kinds of food, gasses are extricated, acids are formed and become a source of pain and disease until discharged. To be dyspeptic is to be miserable, hopeless, depressed, confused in mind, forgetful, irresolute, drowsy weak, languid and useless. It destroys the Teeth, the Complexion, Strength, Peace of Mind and Bodily-ease. It produces Headache, Pain in Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of Chest Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in Mouth, Billious Attacts, Palpitation of Heart, Inflammation of Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms. Dyspepsia invariably yields to the vegetable remidies in GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS, the great purifier of the blood and restorer of health. In these complaints it has no equal, and one bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement. We warrant Golden Seal Bitters. Take no others. ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE AT TECUMSEH, MICHIGAN, AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

TECUMSEH, MICH., OCT. 9, 1884.

Blaine has written another letter of denial, but strange to say, he forgot to say a word about the Mulligan letters.

The fusion county ticket improves with age. As the county canvass progresses, the strength of the ticket becomes more and more apparent. Every nominee has a special fitness for the office he seeks, and every one has personal strength in his own locality. Never, since 1856, have the Democracy of Lenawee County gone into a contest with better candidates to vote for or with brighter prospects of success.

Gov. Cleveland struck the key-note of the campaign, in his brief and manly address to his old neighbors in Buffalo when he spoke these words:

Because I love my state and her people I cannot refrain from reminding you that she should be in the van of every movement which promises a safer and better administration of the General Government, so closely related to her prosperity and greatness. And let me leave you with the thought that your safety lies in impressing upon the endeavor of those entrusted with the guardianship of your rights and interests a pure, patriotic and exacting popular sentiment. The character of the government can hardly rise higher than the source from which it springs and the integrity and faithfulness of public servants are not apt to be greater that the people demand.

Gov. Cleveland paid Buffalo a visit last Thursday and was accorded an ovation such as no man ever received before in that city. Uniformed clubs were present from all the adjoining countries and over seventeen thousand torch bearers were in line. A drizzling rain fell during the entire afternoon and evening but it did not dampen the enthusiasm of the men who had turned out to welcome the reform Governor to his old home. For two hours the procession marched past the Genessee House, formed eight men abreast. It was the greatest demonstration ever witnessed in the state, outside of New York city. Buffalo has answered the malicious, slanderous attacks upon Gov. Cleveland with no uncertain sound.

The Philadelphia Times, an Independant Republican paper, in its comments on the grand Cleveland demonstration at Buffalo, says:

Gov. Cleveland was welcome to Buffalo yesterday by a formal address from a committee of prominent business Republicans, in which they say that "without honesty wisdom is mere craft and cozenage," and they add, obviously as one of their chief reasons for supporting Cleveland for President, that "we prefer an honest Democrat to a dishonest Republican." Mr. Blaine has been greeted by scores of thousands of people in leading centers from Maine to Ohio, but we cannot recall an instance in which Democrats welcomed him with the declaration that "we prefer an honest Republican to a dishonest Democrat" nor can we recall a single instance in which even the most zealous of partisans has introduced Mr. Blaine to a popular assembly as the accepted representative of honest government.

The states of West Virginia and Ohio hold their state elections on Tuesday next, Oct. 14th. The battle in both states is hotly contested, and in Ohio especially it is, without an exception, the most stubborn political fight ever waged in that state. What are the probabilities? West Virginia is properly Democratic. That state should give a Democratic majority of from 3,000 to 5,000. The Greenback fusion with the Republicans will reduce the former majorities there, but still the state should be held by the Democrats by at least 3,000 majority. Ohio is a Republican state. It has never swevered from its allegiance to that party in the presidential year since the party was organized. Four years ago, Ohio gave 19,027 majority in October and gave Garfield 34,000 majority. There is no reason to suppose that Ohio should not hold her own next Tuesday. The Republicans have every advantage in this contest—the speakers, the money, the presence and guidance of both candidates. If Ohio scores less than 20,000 Republican majority next Tuesday, it will be a defeat. If the majority should rise to 25,000 or 30,000, the battle ground will be transferred to New York and Blaine will still have to fight for that state. If Ohio's majority shall drop to 10,000, Cleveland's election will become a certainty.

LETTER FROM ST. JOHN.

CHICAGO, Ill., Sept. 30, 1884.—The secretary of the national prohibition party furnishes the following letter of acceptance from Governor St. John, the candidate of that party for President of the United States:—

OLATHE, Kan., Sept. 26, 1884.

Hon Samuel Dickie, Chairman of the Committee, &c.,

MY DEAR SIR:—In formally accepting the nomination for President tendered to me by the National Prohibition Convention at Pittsburg, Pa., July 23, 1884, I take the opportunity to state while the honor was neither sought nor desired by me, yet it is greatly appreciated, bestowed as it was by a convention composed of delegates in point of real worth and mental ability were fully equal if not superior to those of any political convention that ever assembled in this country. The war for the Union is over. The rebellion has been crushed. African slavery has been abolished. The old issues have passed away, and with them should go the old prejudices and sectional strife. Today the products of the North and South float in friendly relations in the same channels, under the same flag, every section of our country acknowledging allegiance to the same government.

DUTY OF THE PEOPLE.

There never was a time when our people could better afford to, and when it was more important that they should, stop and think than now. With manufactories shutting down, banks breaking, merchants failing in business, securities unsettled, Western wheat selling at the home market for forty cents per bushel and hundreds of thousands of industrious mechanics and laboring men who are willing to work but can get nothing to do, it seems to me that the time has come for the people, who are the source of all political power, to call a halt and stop and think, for there must be a reason for this condition of things.

The little time and space the old parties can spare after dealing out the full measure of personal abuse and vilification that each seems to think the other merits is mainly devoted to the discussion of the tariff question, ignoring all matters that relate to the moral elevation of the people. I am of the opinion that the manufacturer who, by reason of the depressed condition of business, has been compelled to make an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, will not find relief in the agitation of that question now, nor will the average farmer become enthusiastic over its discussion, with his wheat not worth so much in the bin as it cost him to produce it.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

The amount received by the government for duties on imports is less than $200,000,000 annually. There are about 175,000 retail dealers in intoxicating liquors in the United States, each of whom pays to our government $25, in consideration of which sum they are permitted to carry on their business for a term of twelve months. When we add to this the amount paid by distillers, brewers, and wholesale dealers, we find that the interest of the government in the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors is about $80,000,000 annually. This traffic, sanctioned as it is by the laws of our country, costs the people, at a low estimate, a thousand million dollars a year, not to speak of the destroyed homes, debauched manhood, poverty, heartaches, crime and corruption it produces. This disgraceful business should be suppressed, and the enormous sum of money that under the present system is worse than thrown away, saved to the people, and thus a protection would be given to the industries of this country that would enable us successfully to throw our doors open wide to the competition of the world.

A NATIONAL QUESTION.

The republican and democratic parties favor the continuance of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, while the prohibition party demands that the same shall be forever suppressed. Thus an issue is presented to the people in which is involved the protection of every home in the land. It is not a mere local issue either, but it is a national as well as a practical question, upon which a large and respectable body of citizens—against whose convictions party discipline is powerless—have decided to vote, and they will not be found halting between the two opinions touching this matter, but will work and pray and vote against this great evil, until it is driven from our land, never to return. The government is simply a reflex of the individuals composing it. We want an honest, sober people, but we can never have an honest, sober people so long as the government sanctions that which makes its citizens dishonest, drunken and corrupt.

WHAT THE COUNTY NEEDS.

The declaration of principles, which I heartily indorse, as set forth in the platform of the prohibition party, is entitled to the thoughtful consideration and earnest support of all good citizens, without regard to locality or former political affiliation. Our country needs an administration that will rise above mere partizan considerations, and in the selection of public officials make honesty, sobriety and efficiency and not service to party the test. It should be conducted not in the interest of any particular section, party, race or color, but in the interest of the whole people. To accomplish this all good citizens should promptly step to the front and be counted for the right. This is no time for dodging. Moral cowardice will never win, and surely never deserves victory.

Then let us look to God for His guidance, and fearlessly and faithfully do our whole duty, never doubting that He will take care of the results.

Very truly your friend,

JOHN P. ST. JOHN.

The prohibitionists want a prohibitory law. They mean business, they want a party that will make a prohibitory law and sustain it; they want a party that isn't afraid of prohibition in the cities or of whiskey in towns. They want a party composed of men who can be relied upon. They have been democrats or republicans as long as there was anything left in those parties that was of more importance than temperance. Democrats are voting the prohibition ticket because they care nothing for the other tickets of the party. Republicans have stayed by their party till all war questions have been settled and the temperance question is the only great issue of the day with them. They don't care any longer whether republicans or democrats win so long as both parties stand on a beer keg for a platform and wear old rye overcoats.

The Democrats as a party say: No sumptuary laws, no infringement of personal liberty, but high license and no prohibition. That's the party shibboleth; that's its profession. Its members are temperate, but are advocates of license, and moral influence as a means of controlling the liquor traffic. Of course prohibitionists can't expect any aid from them as a party. The republican party is—that's where the shoe pinches; its position is one of those things which "no feller can find out." The republicans living in the towns are strongly in favor of prohibition. They are republicans but outspoken in temperance views. The city republicans are very largely anti-temperance. They drink beer, guzzle tangleleg, and damn prohibition with equal vigor. * * * * * *

In this state, if temperance men were all that prohibitionists want, they should support Begole for Alger takes his nip, and Begole is a red-hot rabid temperance man. But democrats do not ask prohibitionists to support Begole, with any hope of or expectation that he will secure prohibition legislation. He is put forward as a party candidate pledged to his party the same as Alger is and is just as much entitled to the prohibition vote as Alger and no more. Therefore, men who believe in prohibition must stand by the party that openly advocates it, or else merit the contempt of every body for insincerity. If you want to stay a republican, do so, but for the sake of consistency keep your mouth shut about your being a good temperance man and you don't want your party licked by democrats. That's what disgusts all classes. Either fish or cut bait.—Adrian Press.

IS IT RIGHT?

Is it right for men who profess and call themselves Christians to pray "lead us not into temptation," and then needlessly expose themselves to the influence of drinks which have tempted and ruined thousands?

Is it right for men to ask God to "Give us this day our daily bread," and then support a system which licenses men to destroy the good grain by converting it into body and soul destroying drink?

Is it right to build churches, chapels and schools to help save the people, and at the same time license men and women to open shops in which liquors are sold which will destroy the people?

Is it right to license a man to sell drink which will make people drunk, and then fine men and women for getting drunk?

Is it right to license men to make paupers and criminals, and tax sober and virtuous people to pay rates to keep them?

Is it right to derive a revenue out of a system which demoralizes and degrades the people?

Is it right for people to wish the temperance cause success, and at the same time continue to drink and support the liquor traffic?

Is it right for any man or woman who wishes well to their country to stand aloof from the only certain cure for our national intemperance?

The most thoroughly confident and aggressive political party now in the field is the prohibition. Strike a prohibitionists regarding his favorite theme and at once you find him wide-awake, boastful, and if you desire it, ready to "argy" at the "drop of the hat." You may feel that you have no time for this; that business is pressing and you must be off. Not so with the zealot of prohibition. He is ready in a "divine second" to turn the customer in his store over to the clerk and spend half an hour in debate with you, or sit down on a job at $2 per day and take the risk of discharge to "argy" the question of prohibition and set up the most glowing claims of strength and devotion of his party this year.—Adrian Record.

The Adrian Times opens up quite severely upon Prof. Dickie and seems to feel badly because the professor does not advocate the temperance question in a manner to suit the Times.

After reading the recent editorials in that paper one is led to struggle with this question—"Were I to select a man for an example and temperance Apostle for my boy, would it be Mr. Applegate or Mr. Dickie?" It don't require much of a struggle either, to arrive at positive conclusions. The trouble with Tom and prohibition is that he has a horrid fear of the search and seizure clause.

WIDE AWAKE, the coming year, will be strong in the element of romantic adventure demanded by the healthy American boy. Charles Egbert Craddock, who is announced to furnish the leading serial for the Atlantic Monthly, furnishes also the leading Wide Awake serial. It is entitled "Down the Ravine," and is a powerful story of life among the young Tennessee mountaineers. The serial by Elbridge S. Brooks, "In Leisler's Times," and its sequel, "The Governor's Daughter," is a true tale of exciting events in the early history of New York City, in which participated more than one brave Knickerbocker boy, along with battery bears, wolves and Colonial guns. There is "A Group of Four True Western Stories," "A Group of Four True New England Stories," and "A Group of Four True Plantation Stories" (the last by Mrs. Jessie Benton Fremont), each and all of stirring adventure. Then there is a Hawaiian adventure, "How the Boojums went down the Crater," written by the ten Boojums, and a Buffalo Hunt," by Lieutenant Wood, and "A Dahabeih Wreck," by Julian Arnold, and many other true records of adventure.

The Sham and the Real.

Every good thing has its hosts of imitators: every genuine article its counterfeits. Bad manners and wicked habits have theirs also, but he who shams the bad never boasts of it, while they who ape the virtues of the good, or simulate the genuine never hesitate to place the counterfeit before the public in their most alluring forms. When these people imitate they always choose a pronounced type, or popular subject to copy from; and when they claim to be "as good as" So and So, or sell an article "equal to" So and So, the public may depend upon it that Mr. So and So and his article are always the best of the kind. Thus the sham is always proving the genuine merit of the thing it copies.

A firm of enterprising gentlemen produced and popularize an article of household use, such as the Royal Baking powder, whose convenience, usefulness, and real merit make for it an immense and universal sale. A hundred imitators arise on every hand and as they hold out their sham articles to the public, yelp in chorus, "Buy this, it's just as good as Royal, and much cheaper." The Royal Baking powder is the standard the world over, and its imitators in their cry that theirs is "as good as Royal" are all the time emphasizing this fact. In their laborious attempts to show by analysis and otherwise that the "Snowball" brand has as much raising power "as the Royal"; or that the "Resurrection" powder is as wholesome "as the Royal"; or that the "Earthquake" brand is "pure as the Royal," as well as by their contortive twistings of chemical certificates and labored efforts to obtain recognition from the Government chemists and prominent scientists who have certified the superiority of Royal over all others, they all admit the "Royal" to be the acme of perfection, which it is their highest ambition to imitate. But the difference between the real and these imitations, which copy only its general appearance, is as wide as that between the paste and the true diamond. The shams pay homage to the "Royal."

FARMERS CLUB.

According to the adjournment of the Farmers' Social Club at the Lakes, the club met at the residence of Mr. Jno. Benedict, Friday afternoon Sept. 26th. There was a good attendance of members and quite a number of visitors from a distance favored the club with their presence. As there had been no programme previously prepared for the meeting, the most of the time was spent in visiting and discussing the questions of the day until about 4 P. M., when the meeting was called to order by the President, for the regular dispatch of business. After the reading of the minutes of the previous meeting by the Secretary, Mr. Geo. Griswold called the attention of the club to the fact that since our last meeting that it had pleased an all wise Providence to remove from our midst by death, one of our esteemed members, therefore

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed by the Chair to draft resolutions expressive of the feelings of the club, whereupon the following were appointed such committee: E. Russell, Geo. Griswold and F. V. Horton, who presented the fol owing preamble and resolutions which were adopted:

Whereas, The Farmers' Social Club of Tecumseh and Clinton has experienced its first loss by death in the person of Rufus R. Hall, who has been one of its worthy meinbers from its first organization, therefore

Resolved, That in the death of Mr. Rufus R. Hall this club has lost a good and worthy member and fellow citizen, we therefore tender our sincere sympathies to the family and friends in their bereavement.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the records and presented to the family of the deceased, and also published in the Tecumseh HERALD.

C. W. Clough, Editor of the Brooklyn Exponent, died on Wednesday, Sept. 30. He had been failing in health for several months, and his demise was not unexpected, but still his friends were none the less borne down when the final summons came. He was a young man of exemplary character and of superior newspaper ability. If his life had been spared, a successful business future awaited him in a larger field of usefulness.—His family and friends will receive the sincere sympathy of members of the craft.

It would be good for any person to look at the display of the different kinds of bread and cakes which is made every day at the Star Bakery of Arnold Bros. Their head baker, Mr. Fred Kloffenstein, is a master workman and thoroughly understands the business in all its branches. He informs us that he uses only Heck's pastry flour and that during the many years he has been engaged in the business he has found no better. If he can produce such results from Heck Bros.' pastry flour there is no telling what he could do if he were to use their celebrated patent.

In its last issue the Tecumseh Herald "goes into his hole" in regard to an alleged letter, signed "C. T. C.," which it had printed.—Adrian Times.

Not quite, neighbor. The letter was written as a burlesque letter, it was printed as such, and we venture to say it was construed in that light by every man, woman and child, who had ever read Mr. Blaine's interesting Mulligan correspondence. But we willingly published an explanation, which would set Master Crandall right with his Republican friends who are not posted on the correct political literature of the campaign.

The day Blaine was in Toledo, Jerry Root thought he would "call up" the man from Maine and have a talk with him over the telephone. "Hello, says Jerry, "Hitch me on to the Boody House at Toledo." The connection was made and word went over the wire. "Hello, I wish to interview James G. Blaine of Maine." The reply came back from an attendant, "Mr. Blaine is engaged, send your message to me." "Well sir, the Old Globe Mills here in Tecumseh employ a large force of men, nearly every one of whom will vote for Cleveland, but we have one Butler man in the lot; what will you give for him?" The attendant had business elsewhere just then, and no reply came back.

Adrian Record: M. E. Cole, republican farmer of Palmyra, and Geo. Humphrey, prohibition farmer of the same town, differed in their judgment about the variety to which a certain apple, then under discussion, belonged. Finally the crafty Cole, who knew his ground in advance, proposed to settle the point in this way: If he, Cole, was wrong, he should vote the prohibition ticket at the November election; and if Humphrey was wrong he should vote the republican ticket. The referee decided that Cole was right, and Humphrey is "stuck." Cole has "bulled" the market and Humphrey is a "short" who can "cover" only by getting some one so vote the prohibition ticket in his place.

SWINGING AROUND THE CIRCLE.

Several of the beautiful days which the clerk of the weather has favored us with during the past fortnight have been improved in circulating around among the farmers. With the permission of our readers we will record some of our observations. A newspaper man is always in his element when talking gossip. It is so natural and easy to talk about one's neighbors, and when one can indulge in the gossiping propensity, and mind his own business at the same time it becomes doubly attractive. We confess that these little trips among our country friends are very enjoyable. We get better acquainted with the men, sample the goodies which farmer's wives know so well how to prepare and thus enconomize our own board bill at home, find out the babies names, ascertain where the pretty girls live, and have a jolly time generally.

The present chapter will deal with Ridgeway and Macon residents.

Coonrad Lowe lives about a mile south of Ridgeway village, and works a little farm of 300 acres. He never had better crops than this year, and he has his hands full of business. He is not one of those chronic growlers. He is well satisfied with the current price of most farm crops, but says that seventy-five cents for wheat is altogether "too thin." He has made careful estimates of the cost of raising wheat on several different fields during the past few years, and is convinced that farmers should have one dollar per bushel for their wheat, in order to make wheat raising remunerative. We believe he is right.

Wm. B. Ransom has a snug little home in the suburbs of Ridgeway. Mr. Ransom works about the neighborhood and is always "on a job" for his services are in good demand. Mrs. Ransom has a loom in the kitchen and devotes her attention to weaving rag carpets. She has made a stack of rag carpets during the past two years and is now getting out a very pretty one for Mrs. Wm. R. Wilson.

Dan Allen is threshing this fall. He threshes every fall. Threshing is his business. But he confines his attention to threshing farm crops. He never threshes the children for they never need it. His son Frank is now at Jerome as Station agent on the M. & O. The younger children are good scholars and are brought up in the right path. And Mrs. Allen too is entitled to a good word for our excellent supper there.

Geo. W. Jackson is still hammering away in the well known shop. Mr. Jackson is an enthusiastic St. John man now. Whatever he takes hold of has to move along. He is one of the elders in the St. John church at Ridgeway and he says that the political converts this fall are all on his side.

Morris Kelly has a nice home in the village, and a good farm of about 80 acres about two miles out. Like all farmers this year he feels the weight of close times and low prices, but he is a good philosopher for he takes things as they come and makes the best of them. The boys assist in running the farm.

J. P. Underwood is located just east of Britton. He has a good farm, a fine suit of farm buildings, always drives a splendid team, attends to his knitting and in a few years will have one of the best farms on the turnpike.

Elder Rapp has a neat and commodious home on the corner below the church. He ought to enjoy life, for the flock has prospered under his care during the past two years.

G. W. Underwood has a good place, which he is rapidly converting into a good home. He has lately taken the contract to clean out 230 rods of the big Schreeder Brook drain. He was head over heels in the mud when we called, at work with two scrapers and two teams. There are 1300 rods of ditch in this drain which extends East to the county line. George has one of the biggest slices.

Joe Thackray lives on the old Bramble farm where he has dwelt for eighteen years. Joe is a deciple of Cleveland. He can be "depended upon" in office. He has collected the taxes of Ridgeway for years, and could have the place a dozen years more if he would accept of it. The cares of the office dont make him pine away or lose flesh a particle.

Chas. DuBois has a snug place of 60 acres, and is as happy as a clam at high tide, and he has good reason to be. His farm is all paid for, he has one of the best wives in the county and two smart children, a boy and a girl. He certainly ought to enjoy life.

John Cheever is one of the pioneers of Ridgeway, having moved into that town forty eight years ago. For the past four years he has lived on the Columbus Eaton farm near Britton, but he works both places, being 140 acres in all. Mr. Cheever has a splendid home and family, and is looked up to as one of the most enterprising citizens of Ridgeway.

Geo. W. Smith owns 140 acres of land, has good buildings, a fine new brick house, and is well fixed generally. His farm is cut by the Wabash railway, but he got a good bonus for the damage don him. Mr. Smith has three children, one of whom, a daughter, is now attending school at Raisin Valley Seminary.

Geo. L. Oliver, being an old friend of the family, having worked for Judge Stacy over twenty years ago, of course we could not pass him by. He has a model farm of 140 acres, with a fine house and a splendid family.—His crops this year have been bountiful. He believes in tile drainage, having already put in three miles of tile drain on his farm, and he intends to put in three miles more as soon as possible. He has tested the results of tile drainage in special fields, and gives it as his opinion that the extra crop taken from a field the first season after it is tiled will pay for the tiling. This is especially true if it be a wet season. He is an enthusiastic believer in tile draining and claims that he will have one of the most productive farms in the county, as soon as it is properly drained.

Wm. Randall has rented Jeff Pilbeam's farm on the county line for three years and is getting a good start. At the expiration of his present lease he hopes to be able to buy a place of his own.

Frank Smith works Geo. Exelby's prairie farm. It only contains 300 acres, that's all. Frank was at the rear end of a corn field about a mile long when we called, and we didn't have the moral courage to go out and see him. He has a large field to swing in, and if he doesn't succeed it will be his own fault.

The Gripton Bros. deal in "lasses," that is to say the juice of the sorghum cane. Their new boiling works on Chas. Gripton's farm are the most complete we have seen. They have a fifteen horse boiler and engine, a Cook's evaporator and a finishing vat with a coil of steam pipes in the bottom into which the sap is drawn after it is partly boiled and there finished off. They are crowded with work and are now running night and day.

S. H. Linn is living on the old Flavius Hough farm on the old ridge road, and has a good piece of land which is well tilled. One would hardly expect a sedate looking man of his age to be courting, but so it is. He was on the regular panel for the September term of the Circuit Court. Mrs. Linn knows how to get up a good supper on short notice. If you don't believe it, drop in there some evening as the family are setting down to tea.

John Britton's new store at Britton village is now completed, and he will take possession of the same the last of this week with a post office and a stock of goods.

Thomas Hoagland has made some money at farming anyway, for he is building a beautiful new house on his farm, which will fix him up in nice shape.

Byron A. Beal has 40 acres of land which make him a comfortable home. He devotes most of his time, however to selling agricultural implements for the Ann Arbor Agricultural Company, and has worked up a good trade in the vicinity.

J. A. Hunter lives west of the ridge. He took a wife last Febuary, has now settled down to business and works like a tiger every day. He tills his own farm of 40 acres, his mother's farm of 40 acres, and works Robert Burnett's 40 acres on shares. If hard work and economy will accomplish it, Hunter is bound to get rich.

The foregoing is probably a large enough dose for our readers to take in one week, so we close this chapter.

There was a large crowd at the skating rink last Thursday evening, when the first accident of any consequence happened since its erection. While Mrs. Joe VanNess was skating around the course she suddenly lost her balance and fell, striking her head against the side of the building, giving it a severe bruise. She also hurt her arm. It caused quite a commotion for the time being, and in the excitement the News reporter had the terrible misfortune to lose his false mustache that he was wearing that evening for the amusement of the small boys. After considerable search it was found, and he heaved a sigh of relief as he pasted it in its proper place.

Card of Appreciation.

We all learn some time that "a friend in need is a friend indeed." During the past few days I have fully realized the truthfulness of this quotation, as many friends and neighbors have shown unbounded sympathy which has done so much to lighten the sorrows of a bleeding heart; therefore for myself, as well as for all who mourn the death of the one who was dearest to MY heart and life, I hasten to express many, many thanks.

G. P. WARING.

P. J. Welling and family have again taken up their abode in Tecumseh, and Mr. Welling has opened a repair shop in the old agricultural building opposite the Opera House. We are glad to see his health so much improved and welcome him back to the old home with best wishes for his success.

Sau Ah Brah has unqualified testimonals from Dr. Vincent, of Chatauqua, B. F. Jacobs, of Chicago, and Rev. J. D. Fulton D. D., of Brooklyn, all of whom are well known in this community.

The President, P. S. McKinnon announced that there would be three directors to elect for full term of 3 years and two to fill vacancies, also the election of officers. Dr. R. B. House was elected to fill vacancy (2 years) caused by the resignation of Louisa Kaliler and Mrs. Wm. H. Hayden was elected to fill vacancy (1 year) caused by resignation of Jennie Rosacrans Hicks. P. S. McKinnon, A. W. Mills, and Mrs. O. B. DeWolf were elected for full term. The following ing officers for the ensuing year were elected.

Pres.—A. W. Mills.
Vice Pres.—Mrs. Wm. Hayden.
Sec.—R. B. House.
Treas.—O. P. Bills.
Collector—Mrs. O. B. DeWolf.

The association carried a motion that tickets should be issued to stockholders entitling them to the privilege of the Library for one year for the sum of one dollar and to those who are not stockholders the same as formerly, namely fifty cents for three months and one dollar and fifty cents for one year. Stockholders will therefore be obliged to procure their tickets on or before Oct. 18, in order to draw books on that date. A committee, of five consisting of A. W. Mills, Mrs. A. P. Lee, Mrs. C. A. Wright, R. B. House and O. P. Bills were appointed to take into consideration the advisability of giving a course of entertainments during the coming winter for the benefit of the association. It is the purpose of the board of Directors if it is thought advisable to give such a course of entertainments to have them first class in every respect and worthy of the patronage of the public. The success of the Library association has been all its most sanguine originators could expect. An average of about 60 books have been drawn every week during the year, and there is no other source of obtaining reading matter in the village in History, Travels, Fiction or Poetry so cheaply as is offerad by this association. There are shares in the capital stock yet untaken and any person can obtain shares at the rate of $5 per share through the collector Mrs. O. B. DeWolf. We earnestly appeal to the public to rally to the support of this association that it may become one of the permanent institutions of Tecumseh, and one of which we all may be proud.

Only a Miner's Daughter.

On Wednesday evening next will be an unusual event in the history of our announcements, the occasion being the appearance of that powerful organization, the 5th Avenue Comedy Company of New York, consisting of an eminent array of well known artists, and the play one of artistic excellence, entitled "Only a Miner's Daughter"—a strong plot—laughable comedy situations and sensational pictures interspersed throughout the play, combining all the elements that please an audience, and sustained by so excellent a company, it will surely be received in our village by a large house. Tickets can be procured at Adamson's after Monday.

Commissioner Innes says the M. & O. railway company have fully decided to build a road from Monteith to Grand Rapids, parallel with the G. R. & I. and thence to Muskegon. The M. & O. people do not find their arrangements with the West Michigan quite satisfactory, and have determined to reach the cities named by a road of their own.—Allegan Gazette.

The Oriental entertainment at the Opera House Saturday evening is said to be one of the most refined and instructive entertainments in the entire country.

Athlophoros

ATHLOPHOROS is a novel word to most people who speak the English language. The Greeks used it centuries ago, meaning by it "THE PRIZE-BEARER."

ATHLOPHOROS is the first and only medicine which has carried off the prize as the perfect remedy for Rheumatism and Neuralgia.

Like two relentless tyrants they have for ages held their suffering victims in an iron grip. These poor sufferers have been as slaves in the power of their oppressors.

ATHLOPHOROS has entered the arena, engaged in conflict with the monsters, and won the victory. As the competitors in the Grecian games of old could win only by the most severe trials of ability and endurance, so ATHLOPHOROS has won the prize, not alone by giving temporary relief, but by bruising an enduring care, as well, to those who have suffered the excruciating agonies of Rheumatism and Neuralgia.

ATHLOPHOROS is a novelty, not only in name, but in its elements. It is unlike any preparation yet introduced.

ATHLOPHOROS acts on the blood, muscles and joints, removing the poison and acid from the blood, carries them out of the system.

ATHLOPHOROS is put up with consummate skill, and contains nothing that can possibly harm the most delicate constitution.

Now, do you want to suffer on and on? or do you want to be well?

"Athlophoros" WILL Cure You

If you cannot get ATHLOPHOROS of your druggist, we will send it express paid, on receipt of regular price—one dollar per bottle. We prefer that you buy it from your druggist, but if he hasn't it, do not be persuaded to try something else, but order at once from us as directed.

A MARVELOUS STORY

TOLD IN TWO LETTERS.

FROM THE SON: "23 Cedar St., New York, Oct. 28, 1882.

"Gentlemen: My father resides at Glover, Vt. He has been a great sufferer from Scrofula, and the inclosed letter will tell you what a marvelous effect has had in his case. I think his blood must have contained the humor for at least ten years; but it did not show, except in the form of a scrofulous sore on the wrist, until about five years ago. From a few spots which appeared at that time, it gradually spread so as to cover his entire body. I assure you he was terribly afflicted, and an object of pity, when he began using your medicine. Now, there are few men of his age who enjoy as good health as he has. I could easily name fifty persons who would testify to the facts in his case.

Yours truly, W. M. PHILLIPS."

FROM THE FATHER: "It is both a pleasure and a duty for me to state to you the benefit I have derived from the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Six months ago I was completely covered with a terrible humor and scrofulous sores. The humor caused an incessant and intolerable itching, and the skin cracked so as to cause the blood to flow in many places whenever I moved. My sufferings were great, and my life a burden. I commenced the use of the SARSAPARILLA in April last, and have used it regularly since that time. My condition began to improve at once. The sores have all healed, and I feel perfectly well in every respect—being now able to do a good day's work, although 73 years of age. Many inquire what has wrought such a cure in my case, and I tell them, as I have here tried to tell you, AYER'S SARSAPARILLA. Glover, Vt., Oct. 21, 1882. Yours gratefully, HIRAM PHILLIPS."

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA cures Scrofula and all Scrofulous Complaints, Erysipelas, Eczema, Ringworm, Blotches, Sores, Boils, Tumors, and Eruptions of the Skin. It clears the blood of all impurities, aids digestion, stimulates the action of the bowels, and thus restores vitality and strengthens the whole system.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

—The profit derived from farming or stock-raising does not depend upon how much is produced, but upon its cost.

—Ink stains may be removed from wood by washing with a solution of chloride of lime in vinegar.—Cleveland Leader.

—The object of plowing is not merely to invert the soil but to pulverize it. Old ground is like mortar when plowed wet, and will not break up and become mellow; hence it might as well be planted without plowing at all. Sward ground will be partially pulverized by the elements evolved by the decomposition of the grass roots in the soil.—Prairie Farmer.

—Waffles: Three eggs beat well together, then add a little milk, and then beat in flour—half flour and half grits—that has been boiled and cold; just before baking add a teaspoonful of soda.—Boston Budget.

—Fried tomatoes: Take ripe tomatoes, cut them in halves and fry them on both sides in hot lard and butter. Place them upon a hot dish and serve. This dish makes an excellent breakfast relish.—Caterer.

—Unlike most other fruits, autumn and winter pears should be gathered from the tree before they are fully ripe and kept in the house until they are soft and mellow. They must, however, be kept warm as cold destroys all their best qualities and renders them hard and tough.—Indianapolis Journal.

—Few farmers value the common soap water as they should, or really appreciate that it forms one of the most valuable applications to all garden crops. Applied to vegetables—especially celery—it materially aids in their growth, besides making miserable the multitude of worms and bugs that do so much damage. In addition to this it is a good fertilizer.—Utica Herald.

—Boiled custard: To every quart of milk eight eggs—leaving out the whites of four. Sweeten the milk to your taste. Beat the eggs well before mixing with the milk; then put on the fire and let come to a boil stirring it all the time; then take it off and strain and flavor; beat the whites of four eggs to a stiff froth, and when the custard is ready to serve float them on top.—The Household.

—Rye, oats, barley, buckwheat, peas, beans, Indian corn, wheat, bran, shorts or middlings, oil meal—these are all good food, says the National Live-Stock Journal, for fattening sheep. But it is a good plan to give a variety. The writer says the best ration he ever knew was composed of equal parts, by weight, of corn, oats, peas and millet, and to fifteen bushels of the mixture was added one bushel of flaxseed, and all ground together. Two pounds of this with hay gave excellent results.

How to Can Fruit and Save Your Sugar.

I presume all know that there are several kinds of sugar. Cane sugar, grape sugar or glucose, and milk sugar are the principle varieties. Of these cane sugar stands pre-eminent for its sweetening properties, being rated at one hundred, while grape sugar is only rated at forty. In other words, it takes two and one-half pounds of grape sugar to equal one pound of cane sugar. I presume however, that your readers do not all know what is known by every chemist, that when cane sugar and fruit are boiled together the acid of the fruit causes a chemical change in the sugar to take place, which changes the sugar to grape sugar.

I do not suppose they intend to throw away six pounds of sugar out of every ten they use in the preparation of fruit. Yet such is the fact. They have, as a result of the boiling, ten pounds of glucose, which is only equal to four pounds of sugar; and besides this loss the fruit has to a great extent lost its true flavor, and is, of course, inferior in quality to that sweetened with cane sugar. How can fruit be sweeted with cane sugar without making this change or loss of flavor? As that is the principal object of this paper I will answer the question.

First, cook your fruit until it is "done" then, if you have time, let it get cold, and then add your sugar, mixing it well let it stand an hour or more. The sugar by that time will be absorbed by the fruit. If you have not time to wait, add your sugar when it is only partially cool, and you will only lose five or six per cent. of the sugar.

In the making of preserves there are two ways to avoid the loss of sugar. One is to use only glucose and fruits in equal parts, so as to make it of the highest priced sugar. Another way is to cook your fruit as before described, then add one-half a pound of sugar to the pound of fruit and seal up the cans, or steam the fruit when practicable, lay it in the cans and fill up with hot sirup made so as to contain the proper proportion of sugar, and seal. You will then save nearly all the sugar. Preserves made in this way will ferment unless sealed in air-tight cans.

In the ordinary canning of fruit no sugar should be used, as a part of it turns to glucose while hot, and if the fruit in the can ferments through some imperfection in the process, as frequently happens, your sugar is lost entirely. Open your cans an hour or more before meal-time, add your sugar, mix it well and let it stand; the sugar will thoroughly permeate the fruit by that time, and no sugar is lost.

I suppose everybody uses glass cans to a greater or less extent. A good many years ago a lady taught me how to fill a cold glass can with boiling fruit without the danger of breakage. I have seen the plan tried often enough to have entire faith in it.

Place in the empty can a spoon that is long enough to reach from the bottom to the top of the can, pour in your boiling fruit, remove the spoon and seal. The can will not break. Please do not ask me to explain the philosophy of it, as I dislike very much to plead ignorance, so I hope you will ask some of the knowing ones in your vicinity and let me know the explanation.—Cor. Indiana Farmer.

Downright Cruelty

To permit yourself and family to "Suffer!"

With Hop Bitters!!!

Having experienced a great deal of "Trouble" from indigestion, so much so that I came near losing my Life!

My trouble always came after eating any food—

Was by throwing up all my stomach contained. No one can conceive the pains that I had to go through, until "At last"

I was taken! So that for three weeks I lay in bed and Could eat nothing!

My sufferings were so that I called two doctors to give me something that would stop the pain: their Efforts were no good to me. At last I heard a good deal "About your Hop Bitters! And determined to try them." Got a bottle—in four hours I took the contents of One!

Next day I was out of bed, and have not seen a "Sick" Hour, from the same cause since.

I have recommended it to hundreds of others. You have no such "Advocate as I am."—Geo. Kendall, Allston, Boston, Mass.

ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP

FOUR POINTS Prepared by an entirely NEW METHOD. Composed of the PUREST MATERIALS. WILL NOT INJURE THE FABRIC. WILL CLEANSE WITHOUT RUBBING.

You can do a large washing without any rubbing; use the boiling process instead. You can save Time, Labor, Fuel, Soap and Clothing.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.

Cut up fine and dissolve one half bar in half gallon of hot water. Pour half this dissolved soap into a tub with just sufficient hot water to cover a boiler full of clothes. Then put the clothes in to soak, rubbing plenty of soap in the most soiled parts. Be sure that the soaking water is hot; soak the clothes half an hour; stir them occasionally so that they may get the full benefit of the hot suds; pour the remainder of the dissolved soap into the boiler, adding sufficient water to cover the clothes; wring them lightly out of the suds. Soap the stained spots and place loosely in the boiler; boil 10 to 20 minutes, rinse well, blue and hang to dry. Do not crowd the boiler too full. The same boiling water may be used for further boiling by adding a little soap to each boiler-full of clothes. Fannels and prints should not be boiled, only a little rubbing required after soaking. This soap will cleanse clothing as thoroughly as any other without the use of the boiler. We prefer and recommend the boiling process as in itself a cleansing process, saving labor, the wear of the wash-board, and being the best disinfectant known, it is easier to boil the dirt out than to rub it out. You can cleanse perfectly the finest fabric without injury; the finest point lace and lace curtains. Soak point lace in hot suds made with this soap, press water out with the hand; boil 3 to 5 minutes in clean suds made with this soap, rinse thoroughly, press carefully between the folds of a towel, roll in a dry towel, and then between pieces of old flannel. Soak lace curtains 15 to 20 minutes and boil 5 to 20 minutes, rinse, stretch on frame, or pin every scallop to exact form, and let dry; no ironing required.

Be sure and ask for ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP, and take no other.

Sold by leading wholesale and retail grocers everywhere. Dealers may obtain our goods upon application to ELECTRIC SOAP MANUFACTURING CO., Indianapolis, Ind., and 26-28 South Water St., Chicago, Ill.

Putting Stubble Land to Use.

It is getting to be the practice of some farmers to sow their stubble fields, after the crop is removed, with some strong-growing plant for protecting and otherwise benefiting the land; and the practice, where properly carried out, never fails of success. Besides loosening up the ground and keeping it shaded during the hot dry weather which usually follows, and which is hurtful to land exposed, it is a check upon weeds and furnishes the soil with humus and plant food. It is, in fact, a form of green manuring that does not interfere with regular cropping. Not only is no crop lost, but the land is improved; it is richer and more mellow, with less chance for weeds if the seed sown is clean, the improvement considerably surpassing the expense of the outlay; less manure needs now to be used and less work employed on the land.

Where the soil is not too hard the harrow, weighted, will be sufficient to fit the ground for sowing. A rain, penetrating several inches, will greatly favor this. Where the ground is too hard for the harrow, the cultivator will do the work, which, however, should be finished by the harrow. It is only where the land is quite hard or overrun with weeds that the plow is to be used. The sooner this work can be done after the land is cleared of its crop the better, as it gives a longer time for growth.

Among the plants best adapted for this purpose are buckwheat and the pea, both fast-growing and rich in fertilizing material. They soon occupy the ground, and if sown after wheat or rye, which is harvested earliest, will make a full growth that may be turned down either in the fall or spring. The sowing of either of these crops has proved to be of great benefit, both in mellowing and enriching the ground. Where a good growth has been made, no other manuring in general is necessary. Peas are best put in where the land has been worked by the cultivator, the lines made by the implement allowing of deeper covering which this plant requires for its best development. Follow the sowing with the smoothing harrow, which covers it well. The reverse is the case with buckwheat, which will do equally well if not better when lightly covered.

For crops harvested late in the season, rye is the grain to be sown, but continues its growth till winter to the disadvantage of the weeds. If an early spring crop is to follow the rye should be turned down in the fall; for a later crop, like corn, it may be allowed to grow in the spring, when a heavy crop may be plowed under and with great benefit to the land, and rye is a plant rich in fertilizing matter. The growth of these plants may be materially increased by the use of commercial fertilizers where required by the land, which experiment will determine, and their benefit besides will extend to the crop that follows. There is but little labor or time required in applying them.—N. Y. Sun.

The Secretive Turkey

The habits of the domesticated turkey are so allied to those of his wild original congener, and are generally so well known in the districts where this superb table fowl is raised for market, that we need not particularize about his natural characteristics. What is an absolute need for the successful cultivation of turkeys to any extent upon the place is a proper locality, ample room for their range and a little daily care. It is not a difficult thing to do, and turkey-raising is always remunerative if the birds are sufficiently cared for from the outset.

The turkey is of a restless, migratory habit, and loves to wander about during daylight incessantly. They are good foragers if they have pasture and woodland to rove in without stint in the daytime, and at night they are content with a roosting-place in the trees, on high fences, or elsewhere out of doors, in any kind of weather. Thus there is no expense or trouble necessary for providing them with housing or shelter particularly. They are hardy, love the free, open air, are not pestered with vermin generally, and after they "shoot the red," they come forward rapidly, grow thriftily and fatten readily in due season. But they are a secretive as well as a wandering bird. They love to roam away, out of sight, into the woods and brush, and the hens will steal their nests whenever they have opportunity in preference to depositing their eggs within reach of their owners in the best arranged poultry-house in the world. To a certain extent then it is requisite that hen turkeys be indulged in their natural disposition to elude observation; and if their nests in spring-time be located among the shrubbery or in the woods away from the farm-houses in retirement, their eggs will hatch all the better, and the turkeys themselves will be much better contented than if restricted to narrow limits and watched too closely in the laying season. Indeed, the attempt to raise turkeys in confinement can not be successful. They must have roaming space (the more the better) to thrive well.—American Poultry Yard.

The Locomotion of Shells.

The great cuttle, or strombus, has a veritable sword that it thrusts out, sticks into the ground, and by a muscular effort jerks itself along, making a decided leap. The squids, that are the brightest forms of mollusks, leap entirely clear of the water, often several feet. They are the ink-bearers, and from their ink-bags comes the sepia used by artists, while their bone is the cuttle-fish bone of commerce. Many of the cockles have a method of flying through the water that is quite novel. They are generally beautifully colored, and have long, streaming tentacles, and suddenly, without warning, they dart up from the bottom, and by a violent opening and shutting of their valves rush away with their long, reddish hair streaming after them, presenting a very curious appearance. The shell known as the Lima Niaas is particularly remarkable for these flights, and all the scallops are jumpers and leapers. When placed in a boat they have been known to leap out, and the ordinary scallop has been known to jump out of a pot when placed upon a stove. A description of the different methods by which shells move would fill a volume.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Among the Criminal Classes.

I am not in the police, but pursued a vocation in St. Giles' for many years which made me somewhat familiar with the ways of the criminal population in the metropolis. As a rule I found their homes poorly furnished; their wives, if they had any, were fond of gin and beer, and their children were often small, wizened, imperfectly developed and very nomadic in their habits. Some female pickpockets whom I knew generally dressed in semi-mourning and wore little jewelry. They often contrived to steal purses containing large sums in notes and gold at the West End, but they were always in a state of terror, and were often sent to prison for two years at a time. Their most genteel looking boys were sometimes dressed to resemble young gentlemen from Eton and Harrow, and sent to pick pockets; but as they could not "work" with gloves on their hands this alone enabled keen-eyed detectives to know them, for no Eton or Harrow "little man" ever walked down Regent street without wearing his gloves. One very clever thief had a glass eye, which he sometimes wore, and at other times kept in his waistcoat pocket, and by suddenly replacing it in certain critical moments he cleverly escaped detection. He always tried for the gold watches of elderly gentlemen, and, as some of his prizes were very costly, he frequently had much money to spend, and he soon spent it on vicious pleasures. He was at last sent away for seven years to a convict prison. Many of the most ingenious pickpockets spent much of their time in prison cells. I knew one who had been nine years out of twelve in jail. Yet I have known men of this class refuse honest employment, because they wished to enjoy their "liberty."

Large gains simply meant large waste. I have known a thief squander £80 in less than a month. Champagne, pheasants, oysters, cabs, theaters, cards and other similar means of distribution made the heap of gold melt like snow. Then he told me they stole each other's money when they could, for there is no honor among thieves. Some members of the criminal classes, however, enjoy wonderful immunity from capture and punishment. I was acquainted with a man and a woman who passed false coin for thirteen years. They lived in one room in a dark court with their four children and were a striking illustration of the truth that honesty is the best policy. It did not matter how much bad coin they contrived to pass, they were always on the verge of starvation. The peace and beauty of a good home were never theirs, nor of the other criminals who lived in the same court. That some thieves often got large sums of money by their depredations was well known. Three of them contrived to rob a lady of her reticule, which contained nearly £3 0, and they succeeded in baffling all pursuit. When they stole bank notes they took them at once to certain agents who gave them £3 for each £5 note, and then sent it off to another agent in a Continental city. One confederate of burglars had a melting pot always ready to dissolve plate, jewelry, etc., and therefore, if a burglar could only reach his house with his spoil, it was soon reduced to molten metal and the burglar could walk off with the proceeds in his pocket. The forgers of foreign notes were often Russians, Poles or Frenchmen, and they mostly lived near Leicester Square.

Much alarm has been caused by burglars having used revolvers. As a rule, a skillful artiste would not do so. A revolver makes a noise, alarms the neighbors and summons a crowd of pursuers. What the burglar wants, when foiled, is to get away unseen, and hence the use of the revolver is not general among clever house-breakers. One of them, who gracefully showed me how easy it was to enter my own house, told me with a smile that a man who used violence did not know his business, and was not one of his "people." He was a very smooth, gentleman himself, and often visited my private house for a little talk. I am glad to say that he became an honest man and gave a kind employer every satisfaction. Forgers were men of another stamp. They had been schoolmasters, clerks, drapers' assistants, commercial travelers, and so on. The cleverest forger I knew was a pretended clergyman, whose history would fill a volume. He forged documents which enable him to preach, to marry people, to become the chaplain of an emigrant ship, and to perform all the sacred functions of his office, but he got seven years penal servitude at last. He was a good scholar, excessively polite, polished in speech, but crafty, false and ungrateful beyond degree. Another was the son of respectable parents and pursued a course of crime against the post-offices for a long time, until at last he found himself in prison. He has sat at my table with friends who paid me an unexpected visit, and they little knew that the chatty gentleman beside them was a convicted forger.

Not a few criminals connected with the commercial classes escaped punishment through compensation to their wronged employers. I have known a father pay nearly £2,000 to prevent his son being sent at once to the Old Bailey; but the wretched young man did not reform after all. Indeed, in some cases, it is better to leave the law to punish the offender; if not, ruin to all concerned comes in the end. Friends who knew of my innocent connection with the criminal classes have asked me to get back their stolen property for them. If I had a personal acquaintance with the thieves there was no difficulty, and in three noteworthy cases I succeeded, and that, too, without making any compensation to the criminals. Visiting thieves' houses was always a hazardous thing, and once certainly I was in great danger, but I terrified my foe by giving him to understand that I knew all about his last burglary; whereupon he collapsed in the most abject style, and vanished. He was a violent scoundrel, and best in prison.—Pall Mall Gazette.

A CURE FOR GRAVEL.

A Common and Painful Complaint—A Statement you may Confide in.

It seems to have been reserved for Dr David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., to accomplish, through his preparation widely known as KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, what others have failed to compass. The subjoined letter will be found of vital interest to sufferers from gravel and to the general public:

ALBANY, March 20, 1884.

Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

Dear Sir—Let me tell you frankly that I have never been partial to proprietary medicines, as I believe the majority of them to be nothing better than obtaining money from people whom suffering makes ready to catch at any hope of relief. They are mean cheats and delusions. But your Favorite Remedy I know by happy experience to be a totally different thing. I had been a sufferer from gravel for years, and had resorted to many eminent physicians for relief, but no permanent good came of it. About three years ago your Favorite Remedy was recommended to me. I can give you the result in a sentence: I tried it and it cured me completely. I am confident it saved my life. You can use this letter if you think best. Yours, etc.,

NATHAN ACKLEY.

Captain Nathan Ackley was for a long time connected with the Canal Appraisers office in Albany. He is well known and writes for no purpose but to do good to others.

As a medicine for all diseases of the blood, liver, kidneys and digestive organs, Kennedy's Favorite Remedy has fairly won its high reputation. Write if desirable to Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

Mr. Alfred Mosher, of Addison, was the guest of Miss Vina Underwood over Sunday. Wonder if he is intending to return thanksgiving in Nov. with a bride.

Mr. and Mrs. Erastus Rappleye, of Dundee, attended the funeral of Mrs. Waring last week. Mrs. Rappleye's health is improving quite rapidly.

Quite a good many went to Britton last Friday night to hear Hon. Chas. Mosher and Mr. Geo. Hunphrey talk in favor of Prohibition.

Mr. Ase Smith our butcher went home Thursday night sick, and his brother Lank smiled over the block at his old friends.

Mrs. R. T. Bush and Mrs. Warren Jones left for Brooklyn N. Y. Monday. Mrs. Bush returning home and Mrs. Jones for a visit.

MACON MUSIC.

Have you heard from Ohio?

The S. S. concert Sunday evening was a success in every particular.

Rev. Mr. Dutton has returned to his former home. Rumor has it that he will take unto himself a wife before he returns.

Mrs. Minerva Chapin has moved to the Corners. She occupies rooms in the Biddle house.

Democratic rally at Grange Hall Thursday evening. A grand time is anticipated.

HOLLOWAY HICKUPS.

One would naturally think that Raisin was on the doubtful list by the way the public speakers are following us up. Hon. Chas. Mosher spoke to the people at the friends Church Thursday night, on Prohibition, and on Friday night Bro. Stearns of Adrian, spoke at Holloway on the tariff question. Oh dear, we begin to feel like the Dutch Justice who after he had heard both sides of the case was unable to decide because they differed so much. And now we hear that the Democrats are to have another meeting and expect to raise a pole.

Quarterly meeting services were held at the Friend's Church last Sunday. A big crowd and a good time as usual.

Dr. Begel made his people in Jackson Co., a little visit last week, and in the meantime everybody got well. But Doc is after them again and reports begin to come in of sickness on every hand.

Last Monday while Al. Hoxie was threshing over on his farm, a young man met with a very singular accident. His feet slipped in some way on the table causing him to fall onto the point of his knife. Fortunately however, the knife came in contact with the breast bone, which stopped it in its wild career.

W. J. Holdridge went over to Jackson last Tuesday, ostensively on business, but we more than half believe that he went to show his contempt for the Plumed Knight and us fellows that went to Detroit to see him. Say Warren, what is the use of your acting so during every campaigns.

Mrs. Macham is visiting friends in the north part of the state and Al. is the saddest looking man in Mich, He says it is all on account of the low price of wheat, and if we had not had the same experience in the past we might possibly believe him.

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

Miss Belle Maxwell of Adrian, visited at Mr. Harry Palmer's, a former resident of Adrian, last week, and was the guest of Mrs. S. Brown over Sunday, and she returned home on Tuesday morning.

Dr. J. L. Tuttle who has been on the sick list for the last two weeks, is now so much better as to be upon the streets again.

We are now assured that the two law suits between the woolen mill company and some of the stockholders, have both been withdrawn, and matters in difference have been amicably settled by the parties in interest themselves. So may it be, and may we soon hear the click of the spindles again.

We understand that Dr. Cameron is receiving a very liberal patronage and that wherever he has been called he has given good satisfaction as to his knowledge of the healing art and that he is a gentleman that anyone may be proud to add to his list of acquaintances.

The business men of Clinton report good sales and business improving, indications of returning prosperity.

Justice courts have been dull for some time past, but are now disposing of some cases for violation of our village ordinances. The boys, big and little, have been running things pretty much their own way for some time back, but now our Marshall seems determined to enforce the law and punish all those who do wilfully violate our village ordinances. Our Marshall will have the support of all good citizens in his endeavors to enforce the law promptly and wisely.

The Episcopal church people are now engaged in repairing and enlarging the church, as was spoken of some time ago. Consequently there was no service in their church on Sunday last nor will there be any service there for some time to come.

Orange blossoms in abundance. As we have been told there will be at least three weddings in the near future. Some one said Albert VanGieson would be married on Thursday eve. next, and we think Miss Sarah Dillingham will be married then too.

The Fighting chaplain as was announced by bill and otherwise put in his appearance and lectured at the Town Hall as per bills. He commenced his speech by saying he was a minister and Presiding Elder as well in some Iowa district and was the first prohibition candidate for Governor of Iowa. The burden of his speech seemed to be to show the Prohibitionists their error in voting for St. John for President, for they might thereby indirectly help to elect Cleveland President whom characterizes as a man unfit for the office and a libertine. The Republicans are not pleased with his effort. His speech taken as a whole was not calculated to do much good but on the contrary to detract from his reputation and usefulness as a preacher of the gospel. His singing was fine. Result one conversion reported and now it is reported that the Prohibitionists will have a Mr. Fanning from Jackson here on the 24th inst. to give the fighting chaplain's speech that kind of a fanning his speech deserves.

The event of the week was the marriage of Miss Lena Kirchgessner of Clinton at the Catholic church of this place to a Mr. Webber, of Chelsea. After the marriage the large company who had been invited to witness the nuptials of the contracting parties, repaired to the residence of the brides father where a bountiful repast had been prepared which I understand was ample for the multitude. May prosperity attend them. May they always be happy and may life's journey be traveled together without alloy.

The result of the Ohio election was a surprise party to many of our citizens. While the countenances of some had the appearance of having lost a mother, the countenances of others were correspondingly cheerful. What is the use of all of this? The country will survive.

BEST BAKING POWDER.

Interesting Tests Made by the Government Chemist.

Dr. Edward G. Love, the present Analytical Chemist for the Government, has recently made some interesting experiments as to the comparitive value of baking powders. Dr. Love's tests were made to determine what brands are the most economical to use, and as their capacity lies in their leavening power, tests were directed solely to ascertain the available gas of each powder. Dr. Love's report gives the following:

Name of Baking Powders	Strength. Cubic Inches Gas. per each ounce of Powder.
"Royal" (cream tartar powder)	127.4
"Patapsco" (alum powder	125.2
"Rumford's" (phosphate) fresh	122.5*
"Rumford's" (phosphate) old	32.7*
"Hanford's None Such" fresh,	121.6
"Hanford's None Such," old	84.85
"Redhead's	117.0
"Charm" (alum powder	116.9*
"Amazon" (alum powder	111.9*
"Cleveland's" short weight ¼ oz.	110.8
"Sea Foam"	107.9
"Czar"	106.8
"Dr. Price's"	102.6
"Snow Flake" (Groff's, St. Paul)	101.88
"Lewis's" Condensed	98.2
"Congress" yeast	97.5
"Pearl"	93.2
"C. E. Andrews & Co's con. alum	78.17*
"Hecker's"	92.5
"Gillets"	84.2
"Bulk"	80.5

*In his report, the Government Chemist says: "I regard all alum powders as very unwholesome. Phosphate and Tartaric Acid powders liberate their gas too freely in process of baking, or under varying climate changes suffer deterioration."

Dr. H. A. Mott, the former Government Chemist, after a careful and elaborate examination of the various Baking Powders of commerce reported to the Government in favor of the Royal brand.

Our republican friend's whiskers will be redder than they are now if he should have to do the wheelbarrow act.

AT THE MAKING OF THE HAY.

When the whippoorwills are calling,
And the apple-blossoms are falling,
With a tender, taut foreboding
Summer's bush up in the grass;
Where the little stars are peeping
Which above the meadow sweeping,
And the jack-o'-lantern's peering
I will meet my bonnie lass.

I will seek her; I will find her;
I will stay stealthy behind her;
And with kisses I will bind her,
The sole sets the happy day.
And when the barley's heading,
And the summer rose is shedding,
Oh, there'll be a merry wedding
At the making of the hay.

BENEFIT OF EARTHQUAKES.

What Would Happen to the World If They Did Not Occur—The Constant and Persistent Attacks of Ocean—Some Facts Concerning Seismic Phenomena.

At the present time the community is considerably interested in the cause of earthquakes, and scientific men are appealed to for opinions as to the reasons of their occurrence, which opinions are generally given with erudition and in terms of greater or less lucidity. It is very interesting to learn that Prof. Simon Newcomb attributes the occurrence of earthquakes to the cooling of the liquid mass hundreds of miles below the surface of the earth, the consequent contraction of the mass causing a vacuum into which the area above must fall—for "nature abhors a vacuum" as much in the bowels of the earth as upon its surface. However unpleasant this theory may be to the parties living directly over the vacuum, there seems no reason to doubt it—in fact there is no tangible way to refute it.

Other authorities, or theorists, have alleged some undefined and unexplainable connection between earthquakes and the spots on the sun, but they do not meet with favor generally, because, as a rule, people want to know something of the "why and wherefore."

Without in any degree losing our interest in the cause, might we not find it profitable and satisfactory to give some consideration to the results of earthquakes? It may sound strangely to refer to the earthquake as a benefactor to the face of the earth, but according to the ideas of some eminent seismologists it is. Let us analyze rather more fully than people give it credit for. It is the restoring agent, the compensating back action, so to speak, of some very powerful encroachments on earth's domain. Individuals, towns, countries may suffer, cities may be swept out of existence and seaports destroyed by it, but the world at large is the gainer, geographically at least, by every earthquake. And a geographical gain is the gain of the world's inhabitants as a whole. Nature seeks the greatest good of the greatest number. Had there never been an earthquake in the past, mankind would not now be in existence on the face of the earth; should there be no earthquakes in the future, the race would be doomed to extinction in much less time than now, in the ordinary course of events, seems probable.

Why?

If the earth was created, or began its gyrascopical existence as a perfect sphere—as the geologists, who undertake to delve back into antegeologic times assert that it was—or did it, it is palpably evident that its surface was entirely covered with water, presenting the appearance—had anybody been there to see it—of a liquid ball. At that period it was not "the waters under the earth," but the earth under the waters. What other agency than a subterranean force could have elevated portions of the watery bed of this great globular sea above its surface and made it dry land? And for every such elevation there must obviously have been, in accordance with the compensating laws of nature, a corresponding depression somewhere. That the depression occurred first we are bound to believe, if we accept Prof. Newcomb's theory of the cooling of the subterranean liquid mass. The earth's interior being practically filled already with this mass, a rise corresponding in amount to the value of the depression must necessarily occur at some point.

Water is land's greatest enemy, and when continents and islands became formed by this process (which may have been, and probably was, gradual), there began a contest for supremacy between the two elements, a contest which has continued ever since and will continue to the end of time.

How?

The sea is constantly struggling to destroy the land by beating upon and washing away its shores. The process is a slow one, it is true, and many might be reasonably inclined to doubt it, in view of the fact that the changes in coast lines are practically imperceptible in long intervals. There are comparatively few localities whose present topographical lines do not antedate history. But the elements are relentless, and to them centuries are less than minutes are to men—in fact, they know no time. And we are prevented from verifying the destructive action of the sea, on account of the restorative agencies to which allusion has been made, and which are constantly at work to check the encroachments of the ocean. Were it not so, water's power would be cumulative, for the faster the land succumbed the higher the sea would rise, and with its ever increasing rising make more devastating inroads on the constantly-decreasing land.

There are localities, however, where absence of the restorative force allows a study of the truth of this theory, as for instance the Shetland Isles, whose rock ribbed coasts seem, of all others, best calculated to resist the encroachments of the sea. But, subjected as they are to the constant and ceaseless pound, pound of the Atlantic billows, they are disintegrating—slowly in the mind of man, rapidly in the economy of the universe. Notable changes have occurred here even within the scope of history. Sir Charles Lyell says of this locality: "Steep cliffs are hollowed out into deep caves and lofty arches, and almost every promontory end in a cluster of rock, imitating the forms of columns, pinnacles and obelisks."

"The Isle of Stenness," says Dr. Hibbert, "presents a scene of unequaled desolation. In stormy winter large blocks of stone are overturned or are removed from their native beds and carried to a distance almost incredible. In the winter of 1803 a tabular mass eight feet two inches by seven feet, and five feet one inch thick, was dislodged from its bed and carried to a distance of from eighty to ninety feet. But the most of the stone is water worn, a mural pile demonstrating the process of disintegration that is devastating the coast. Ages ago to have been left as a sort of protest against the inroads of the ocean. The chain of which provoked by wintry gales, battered against it with all the force of local artillery, and the waves in their repeated assaults have at length forced for themselves an entrance. This breach, named the Grand of the Navir, is widened every winter by the overwhelming surge, that, finding a passage through, it separates large stones from its sides and forces them no less than one hundred and eighty feet. In two or three spots, the fragments which have been detached are brought together in immense heaps, that appear as an accumulation of cubical masses, the product of some quarry."

In moleness, where the sea has found less resistant material, an immense cavern has been hollowed by the action of the waves to a depth of 250 feet.

The coast of Yorkshire furnishes evidence of the destructive action of the water upon the land, many spots laid down on the old maps as the sites of towns being now simply sand banks. Many places once towns of note are now only recorded in history, among them Ravensperg, which was at one time a rival of Hull and of so much importance as a port that from it Edward Baliol and the confederated English barons sailed in 1332 to invade Scotland, and it was here that Henry IV. landed in 1399 to depose Richard II. This once flourishing seaport now consists mainly of extensive sands, dry at low water."

Rapid decay has also taken place on the shores of Norfolk and Suffolk. A certain inn was built at Sherington and it was calculated that seventy years would pass before the sea would reach the spot, the computations being based upon previous occurrences which demonstrated an average annual loss of one yard of land. But no allowance having been made for the fact that the land sloped from the sea, the devastation was more rapid than had been expected, the premises were swept away in far less time than had been anticipated.

In another way, the action of water tends to encroach upon the land and carry it to sea. One would hardly believe that the rainfalls in the interior had any appreciable effect in this direction, but some eminent geologists assert that the influence of inland rainfalls in this respect is not inconsiderable in the course of time. Instances, according to these authorities, might be referred to, but the limit of space prevents it. It may be going too deeply into the subject to consider that the more earth there is washed into the sea the higher the sea will rise, and the higher the sea rises the larger evaporating surface is presented to the sun's rays, thereby causing a greater rainfall—more cumulative power, by the way. But some writers have not thought this part of the subject too absurd for investigation. It is to be remembered that this little raindrop and this big billow are not going to do their work in a year or a century, and it must be admitted that, without recuperative power or restorative force, the time would some time come when all the land would be under water once more. Water has a very leveling tendency.

But the earth happily possesses a restorative force. What is it?

Earthquakes. Or, what amounts to the same thing, the dynamite power that demonstrates itself in earthquakes.

It has already been suggested that a depression of the earth's surface from whatever cause creates an elevation somewhere. Dig a well, and the removed earth makes the surface higher around it.

It has been ascertained by comparison that, as a general rule, upheavals act most powerfully upon land, and especially near coast lines, while depressions are most likely to occur under the ocean's bed. This provision of nature is favorable to land in two ways. The upheaval strengthens the shore to resist encroachment, while the depression lowers the sea level, according to its depth.

Chili was visited in November, 1822, by an earthquake which was severe and destructive. On the day following the shock it was discovered that the sea had receded from a broad line of coast more than one hundred miles in length. Between the old and the new low water marks fishermen gathered shellfish that they had been able to obtain previously only in the surf. Rocks which had been covered at low water were now dry at half-tide.

A corresponding rise of the land was appreciable along the coast, but it was greater a little way inland than near the shore. A water-mill about a mile from the beach had gained a fall of fourteen inches in one hundred feet. The rise was three and four feet at Valparaiso and Quintero respectively. Similar phenomena occurred in Chili in 1835 and 1837 when the permanent rise was two feet on the first and eight feet on the second occasion.

A remarkable instance of both upheaval and depression occurred at Cutch in 1819. The estuary of the Indus which had been only a foot deep at flood tide, was deepened to eighteen feet. The fort and village of Indree were submerged, the roofs of the houses and the highest objects only being visible. And yet the earthquake was not so land destroying after all, for, at a distance of five or six miles from Sindree, there appeared a long and high mound where there had previously been a low and level plain. This mound ran parallel to the line of depression for fifty miles. Its greatest height was ten feet and its breadth in some places sixteen miles.—Boston Herald.

Putrefaction in Eggs.

The following conclusions have been arrived at in studying the phenomena attending the process of putrefaction in eggs. It has been asserted by some that if eggs are not shaken they will keep good, but if they are jarred they will spoil in less than a month. Dr. Borne has also declared that no organisms ever occur within an egg, no matter how advanced may be its decay. Dr. Gayon, from his investigations, contradicts this assertion. As to the latter, several organisms were discovered by Dr. Gayon in addled eggs, the more common of which are Bacterium termo, a torulo and an aspergillus. Dr. Gayon does not believe the germs of these organisms do not enter the egg through the pores of the shell, but are present at its formation. The same organisms found in the egg are also discovered in the oviduct and cloaca of some hens, and these prove also to be the more abundant in fertilized than in sterile eggs. On using an injection containing numerous bacteria they were more plentiful in the eggs that followed. These observations offer an explanation of the presence of foreign bodies in eggs, such as insects, small stones, seeds, etc., which have sometimes been known to occur. In the eggs of a hen that had been fed on the refuse of a hennery have been found the germs of alcoholic yeast. It has been clearly demonstrated that the jarring of an egg has no effect in inducing its decay and molds have no influence in causing their putrefaction. It is probable that this depends in a good degree upon the nature of the food taken by the hen. If this be true, and there is no doubt of it, poulterers may receive a useful hint. There is no doubt that the fertility and the purity of the egg depend in a great measure upon the food and the surroundings of hens.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Stay on the Farm.

The disposition of so many young men to leave the farm and come to the city is not creditable to their intelligence. Every city in the country is overcrowded with this class of helpless young men. They grow up on the farms with no idea of the trials and temptations that beset their class in the large cities. They think they can live in the cities without the toil and drudgery they say is a part of farm life. There are many ways of living in a city, but there is but one honorable way, and that is surmounted with as many trials and hardships as earning one's living on the farm, and that is to earn it honestly. A young man without a trade will find he has to work harder to make both ends meet in the city than on a farm. The young man who thinks the world owes him a living and that the obligation will be cancelled in the cities, makes a mistake that is often learned too late. There is no more room for idlers in the city than on the farm. The criminal class receives some of its most vicious recruits from young men who thought they were too smart to be farmers, came to the city, found they had made a mistake, dropped into bad company, and will end their lives on the scaffold or in the penitentiary. No, young man, you are not too smart for the farm. The smartest man that ever lived hadn't sense enough to reach perfection in farming. Be independent. While there is always something to do on a well-regulated farm, if you have a leisure moment, use it in study or selling the many kinds of goods you will find that are especially made for your benefit. You can always find something to do if you want to work. If you don't, we have no time to reason with you.—Agents' Herald.

Keep Your Best for Home.

There is no place where good manners and punctilious etiquette is of more value than in the home. It is the moral agent of good breeding: it is the law that governs the manifestations of kindness and good feeling, and also the law that restrains unkind and ignoble traits of human nature from expression.

Keep your best temper for home. In society, on the streets, in business, everywhere, it is easier to control that attribute, if we guard the hasty word, the peevish tone, the irritating action in the home circle, and study to wound none of its inmates.

Keep your best spirits for home. Nowhere do gloomy and depressed spirits tell so disastrously as at home. The parents may have just cause for anxiety and care, but it is wrong and unjust to shadow the young life of children with anxieties they cannot appreciate, and cares they cannot understand. The tendency to brood over trouble or misfortune increases with its indulgence. So, also, the disposition to be cheerful and happy at all times increases with cultivation. This is by far the most admirable trait. Those who are sunshiny and cheerful in character always have the most friends, and where are friends so true and loyal and so desirable to perpetuate as those of home and family? The old comparison of the bent twig is as true in this case as in any other, and children who grow up in an atmosphere of foreboding of the future, anxieties about the present, and cynical reflections on the motives and actions of people about them, are training a tendency to be miserable and sad, and in their turn cast shadows, instead of sunshine, on the path of all about them.—National Presbyterian.

Liquid Manure.

Any sort of manure infused in water, which is then poured over the soil, containing the roots of the plants to be fed, constitutes liquid manuring. Nature manures similarly with the water of rain, which, falling on the surface, dissolves a small portion of whatever plant food may be there and carries it to the roots. It will be seen that there is a great advantage in the slow solubility of the surface plant food; wet seasons dissolve it faster than plants consume it, and it wastes, so that after wet seasons, we usually have reduced crops, and good ones after dry seasons: (with water) in dry countries. Liquid manuring is largely used in pot culture of plants and fruits. As in feeding animals, moderation and dilution are advisable. It is a means of supplying at any moment, and in any degree, what nature feeds irregularly, and often slowly. With it, pure sand alone is a sufficient and excellent soil.—N. Y. Tribune.

AYER'S Hair Vigor

restores, with the gloss and freshness of youth, faded or gray hair to a natural, rich brown color, or deep black, as may be desired. By its use light or red hair may be darkened, thin hair thickened, and baldness often, though not always, cured.

It checks falling of the hair, and stimulates a weak and sickly growth to vigor. It prevents and cures scurf and dandruff, and heals nearly every disease peculiar to the scalp. As a Ladies' Hair Dressing, the Vigor is unequaled; it contains neither oil nor dye, renders the hair soft, glossy, and silken in appearance, and imparts a delicate, agreeable, and lasting perfume.

MR. C. P. BUTCHER writes from Kirby, O., July 3, 1882: "Last fall my hair commenced falling out, and in a short time I became nearly bald. I used part of a bottle of AYER'S HAIR VIGOR, which stopped the falling of the hair, and started a new growth. I have now a full head of hair growing vigorously, and am convinced that but for the use of your preparation I should have been entirely bald."

J. W. BOWEN, proprietor of the Mc Arthur (Ohio) Enquirer, says: "AYER'S HAIR VIGOR is a most excellent preparation for the hair. I speak of it from my own experience. Its use promotes the growth of new hair, and makes it glossy and soft. The Vigor is also a sure cure for dandruff. Not within my knowledge has the preparation ever failed to give entire satisfaction."

MR. ANGUS FAIRBAIRN, leader of the celebrated "Fairbairn Family" of Scottish Vocalists, writes from Boston, Mass., Feb. 6, 1881: "Ever since my hair began to give silvery evidence of the change which Setting Time procureth, I have used AYER'S HAIR VIGOR, and so have been able to maintain an appearance of youthfulness—a matter of considerable consequence to ministers, orators, actors, and in fact every one who lives in the eyes of the public."

MRS. O. A. PRESCOTT, writing from 18 Elm St., Charlestown, Mass., April 14, 1882, says: "Two years ago I lost two-thirds of my hair came off. It thinned very rapidly, and was fast growing bald. On using AYER'S HAIR VIGOR the falling stopped and a new growth commenced, and in about a month my head was completely covered with short hair. It has continued to grow, and is now as good as before it fell. I regularly used but one bottle of the VIGOR, but now use it occasionally as a dressing."

We have hundreds of similar testimonials to the efficacy of AYER'S HAIR VIGOR. It needs but a trial to convince the most skeptical of its value.

THE WONDER

Is becoming universal as to how such an immense sale could be created in Lowell for HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA. But, my friend, if you could stand behind our counter a week and hear what those say who are using it, the reason would appear as clear as the noon-day sun. The real curative power of HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA demonstrates itself in every case where our directions are faithfully regarded. We would that we might get before the people a fractional part of the confidence that is expressed to us every day in this medicine by those who have carefully noted (without prejudice) its effects upon the blood and through that upon the whole system, stimulating all the functions of the body to perform the duties nature requires of them. Try a bottle and satisfy yourself.

Cold Hands and Feet.

LOWELL, Feb. 3, 1879.

MESSRS. C. I. HOOD & CO.: Gentlemen—About one year ago my daughter commenced taking your Sarsaparilla. At that time she had very little appetite; could take no long walks, and her face was badly broken out with a humor. She was low-spirited; troubled with cold hands and feet; her blood seemed to be poor, and she was in a condition which caused us great anxiety. After taking one bottle of your Sarsaparilla she began to improve; and she now has a good appetite and can take much longer walks. Her humor is nothing compared with what it was one year ago. She is in better spirits, is not troubled with cold hands and feet as previously. And I attribute this improvement in her condition largely to your Sarsaparilla. She has taken six bottles, and intends to continue its use. I was inclined to oppose the trial of it at first. I now have great faith in it as a blood purifier. Very truly yours,

GREENWICH MERIDIAN.

The International Prime Meridian Congress Adopted Greenwich as the Initial Meridian.

Governor Sheldon States that the Taxable Property of New Mexico has Increased $4,000,000 and Business Flourishing.

INTERNATIONAL MERIDIAN CONGRESS.

WASHINGTON, October 14.—The International Meridian Congress reassembled yesterday. The proposition advanced by the French delegates favoring the adoption of a neutral meridian was, after discussion, rejected by a vote of three to twenty-one, France, Brazil and San Domingo only favoring it.

The proposition originally offered by Mr. Rutherford, of the United States, favoring Greenwich as the initial meridian was then taken up and discussed.

Mr. Lefaivre opposed its adoption, saying Greenwich was not the scientific meridian, that it implied no progress in any of the sciences, but was merely a commercial standard. As nothing could be gained to science by adopting Greenwich, France, he said, could not make a sacrifice of her own meridian and incur the vast expense consequent upon the adoption of a new one.

Sir William Thompson, of England, was present as a guest, and by invitation spoke in favor of the Greenwich meridian. He argued that it was purely a matter of convenience, and Greenwich answered the convenience of the world better than any other standard meridian.

The resolution favoring the Greenwich meridian was then adopted. Twenty-one nations favored it; one, San Domingo, voting against it, and France and Brazil abstaining from voting.

Mr. Rutherford then moved the adoption of a resolution proposing to count longitude in two directions, east and west, 180 degrees from Greenwich.

Count Lewenhaupt, the Swedish Minister, proposed to count longitude continuously through the whole three hundred degrees. These two propositions were discussed briefly, but without taking a vote the Congress adjourned till this afternoon.

TAXABLE PROPERTY OF NEW MEXICO.

Governor Sheldon, of New Mexico, in his annual report, states that the taxable property of the Territory during the past year has increased $4,000,000. The Territory, he says, is prosperous, schools are increasing, and agricultural and mining interests are flourishing.

A Defaulter Arrested.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., October 14.—Benjamin G. Owens, Secretary of the Board of Directors of the Academy of Music, has defaulted to the amount of about $80,000. DUEL BETWEEN BROTHERS.

Two Brothers Fight to the Death With Jack-Knives.—Cotton Mills Shut Down Terrible Suffering Among Its Operatives.

NORWICH, Conn., October 13.—Last Wednesday, in an old-fashioned farm house near West Ashford, Windham county, a terrible fight between brothers ended in a murder. Joseph and Andrew Squires quarreled over a wagon trade, and drawing big jack-knives began to cut and thrust one another. Joseph, who was overmatched, received three wounds in the breast, one in the shoulder, another on the arm, several in the back of the head, and a long, fatal cut extending from the back of the ear across the jugular. In his death agony he struggled away toward the door but repeatedly plunged the knife into his brother's head. It was not till another brother arrived and pulled Andrew away that the blows ceased. Joseph died at nine o'clock in the evening. Andrew was arrested next day and Saturday he was committed on charge of murder.

The large Falls Cotton Mills of this place shut down over six weeks ago and will probably remain closed all winter. Between 500 and 600 operators were thrown out and six week's idleness has reduced most of them to destitution. For a while they were allowed "trust" at the company's store, but lately that source of supply has been cut off. What they are to do they do not know. They have no means to migrate to other mill towns and even if they had, the universal stagnation throughout New England promises no benefit from the change. Rows of families are seen at the Selectmen's office daily; many of the women and girls weeping as they apply for bread. In all the mill villages in New England the situation is pretty much the same. The help live from hand to mouth, and rarely save a dollar. When the mills shut down the operative is as helpless as a castaway in mid-ocean. It is the opinion of an observer, whose business has called him to all parts of New England, that the coming winter will witness suffering among the working people unparalleled in the country's history.

The Damage to the Quebec Parliament Greater Than at First Supposed.

QUEBEC, October 14.—The troops placed around the Parliament buildings Saturday night were withdrawn at 7:30 Sunday morning and a strong guard of police substituted. No person was allowed to approach the building during the night and Sunday a most vigorous watch was kept. The excitement is unabated and upwards of 40,000 persons visited the scene of the disaster yesterday. All sorts of rumors are in circulation, one being that four strangers have been prowling around the building and acting in a suspicious manner. A prominent civil employe says he overheard a conversation between three or four men who stated that they would soon have their grievances set right. The police thought last night they had a positive clue. Upon inspection it was found that the hole made by the first explosion was much larger than was at first reported. It is now believed the entire wall of the northeastern portion of the house will have to be taken down at an expense of $25,000. The building will not be completed in time to admit of a session there this year, and Music Hall will probably be leased. The explosion was felt over the entire city. Montcalm Market, a quarter of a mile distant, was shaken to its foundation. Mayor Langture's residence on the opposite side of the street from the Parliament House was badly shaken and nearly all the windows were shattered. Military guard is still kept over the magazines and stores and the cartridge factory.

Captain of an Italian Brig Washed Overboard and Lost.

NEW YORK, October 13.—The Italian brig Emanuele from Balboa July 26, arrived to-day almost a wreck in charge of her first mate, her captain, Mealasiano, having been swept away and drowned in a most terrific storm. The Emanuele has a cargo of iron ore and liquorice root. She had fine winds until September 10th, when a heavy gale sprang up and it was with the utmost difficulty that she could be kept right side up. The darkness was intense and the waves dashed against the vessel with a force that it seemed would shatter her to pieces. The Captain seeing the great danger rushed to the center of the deck, but a gigantic wave carried him overboard.

Fatal Accident in a Cincinnati Hospital.

CINCINNATI, October 14.—An accident occurred at the City Hospital yesterday morning, resulting in the death of Wm. T. Thomas and Christ Turdoest, a patient. The former was attempting to remove the latter to the amphitheatre on a stretcher, and fell through the elevator hatchway, a distance of forty feet with the truck on top of them. Death was almost instantaneous.

An Indian Battle.

MILES CITY, Mont., October 14.—Stockmen from the Rosebud report that forty miles south of the Northern Pacific the Cheyennes, led by Two Moons, Brave Wolf and Little Wolf, had a fight with a band of Piegans on Wednesday, killing one Piegan and wounding several others. The Cheyennes were on the war path, and said the Piegans stole their horses.

The fault with most all cough preparations is that they contain morphia and are absolutely injurious to the stomach and nerves. That simple preparation of wild cherry bark, called Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry contains no morphia and yet will cure a cough or cold in less time than any other compound. It is the only reliable cure for consumption.

Home Politeness.

A boy who is polite to his father and mother is likely to be polite to every one else. A boy lacking politeness to his parents may have the semblance of courtesy in society, but is never truly polite in spirit, and is in danger, as he becomes familiar, of betraying his real want of courtesy. We are all in danger of living too much for the outside world, for the impression which we make in society, coveting the good opinions of those who are in a sense a part of ourselves, and who will continue to sustain and be interested in us, notwithstanding these defects of deportment and character. We say to every boy and to every girl, cultivate the habits of courtesy and propriety at home—in the sitting room and the kitchen, as well as in the parlor—and you will be sure in other places to deport yourself in a becoming and attractive manner. When one has a pleasant smile and a graceful demeanor, it is a satisfaction to know these are not put on, but that they belong to the character, and are manifest at all times and under all circumstances.

Many who long suffered from uniary and digestive diseases, causing nervousness, weakness and debility, after trying bitters, kidney medicines, iron medicines, etc., without benefit, have found permanent relief in from one to three bottles of Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaprilla, the only perfect blood purifier and strengthener. Hundreds of letters to the proprietors have testified to its superiority over the many pretended cures so largely advertised by means of bogus certificates that are bought and paid for.

A Rare Talent.

The faculty of drawing out of persons with whom one is conversing the best there is in them—brighter things even than they suppose themselves capable of—is the rare gift with which Nature has endowed some women. George Eliot was a most charming person in conversation, though she was a women of few words, because of her intuitive insight into the thoughts of others. A few words would put her in possession, not of what they said, but of what they would fain have said, and she would so improve upon it that ordinary people went away charmed with her who had made them for once at least feel themselves to be wise. Long afterward, perhaps, she would call to their remembrance the wise or witty things which they could hardly believe themselves to have said, and which they assuredly never would have said but for her quickening influence.

Woman's best friend for relieving the many pains and weaknesses incidental to female life, and one that gives rosy cheeks, brightens the eyes, checks every unnatural drain and creates a perfect picture of health and beauty, is Dr Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaprilla. It purifies the blood, strengthens the female system, and removes all feeling of languor, distress, pimples, sores and weakness, producing dreamless slumber and painless regularity of natural functions.

C. A. Wright & Co., will refund the price paid if Acker's Blood Elixir does not relieve any skin or blood disorder. A new, but thoroughly tested discovery.

Long visits, long stories, long essays, long exhortations, and long prayers seldom profit those who have to do with them. Life is short. Time is short. Moments are precious. Learn to condense, arrange, and intensify. We can bear things that are dull if they are only short. We can endure many an ache and ill if it is over soon, while even pleasures grow insipid, and pain intolerable, if they be protracted beyond the limits of reason and convenience. Learn to be short. Lop off branches; stick to the main facts in your case. If you pray, ask for what you would receive, and get through; if you speak, tell your message and hold your peace; boil down two words into one, and three into two. Always learn to be short.

C. A. Wright & Co. state that indigestion prepares every one for disease, but guarantee Acker's Dyspepsia Tablets to cure all forms of indigestion.

The Fountain of Youth.

Dyspepsia is the prevailing malady of civilized life. A weak dyspeptic stomach acts very slowly or not at all on many kinds of food, gasses are extricated, acids are formed and become a source of pain and disease until discharged. To be dyspeptic is to be miserable, hopeless, depressed, confused in mind, forgetful, irresolute, drowsy, weak, languid and useless. It destroys the Teeth, the Complexion, Strength, Peace of Mind and Bodily ease. It produces Headache, Pain in Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of Heart, Inflammation of Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms. Dyspepsia invariably yields to the vegetable remedies in GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS, the great purifier of the blood and restorer of health. In these complaints it has no equal, and one bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement. We warrant Golden Seal Bitters. Take no others. Sold by Baker & Hall, and C. A. Wright & Co.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE AT TECUMSEH, MICHIGAN, AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

TECUMSEH, MICH., OCT. 16, 1884.

The election of Lt. Salsbury for Prosecutor is a foregone conclusion. He has been a faithful and efficent officer, and the people of Lenawee county will extend his official lease two years longer.

The Democrats hit the nail on the head when they nominated Horace Holdridge for the Legislature in this district. With proper effort we believe he can be elected. Still his competitors are both strong candidates and it behoves Mr. Holdridge to be "hustling about" and improving his time before election day.

A. K. Whitmore and D. A. Bixby were looking after their fences in this section of the county one day last week. They find no holes to stop up or broken posts to reset in this neighborhood. They will not only pole every Democratic and National vote but many Republicans who believe in voting for the best men will find use for their slips.

Among the many excellent candidates on the fusion county ticket, Danforth Keyes, of Clinton, for Register, is one of the best. Mr. Keyes was for many years a prominent business man of that village, has been supervisor several times and has served many years on the school board, and one term in the Legislature. He would fill the position of Register most acceptably.

Edwin P. Wood is making a gallant run for Probate Judge. In natural adaptability and in legal experience both, there is no attorney in Lenawee County better equipped to fill that office creditably. He has enjoyed an extensive practice in Probate Court for many years, with marked ability and success. We have faith to believe that Judge Wood will preside over the Probate office in the new Court House.

Col. Eldredge is not running a brass band campaign this fall, but he is making a quiet and thorough canvass. His record made at Washington proves him to be a careful legislator, and what is as much to the point in these corrupt times—an honest man. Although the Republican vote will be much larger than two years ago, he has the advantage of the full greenback strength, which was cast for a third candidate in 1882. With proper work in his behalf, there would seem to be no reasonable doubt of his election.

We have traveled about the county a good deal during the past month and have been surprised to find that many farmers who will vote a straight Blaine or fusion electoral ticket, will vote for David Preston for Governor. If the campaign runs for the next three weeks in this state as it has been running for the past month, the governorship will lie between Begole and Preston. The action of the typographical unions in boycotting Gen. Alger is likely to cost him ten thousand votes.

The celebrated case wherein Ben Turner was plaintiff and Master C. T. Crandall was defendant has been discontinued. Master Crandall says the plaintiff paid his own costs. Ben Turner, over his own signature, declares the assertion to be a "false, cowardly and malicious statement." We regret to see Master Crandall following in the footsteps of the illustrious "Man from Maine." Having decided to throw an anchor to windward in Ben Turner's behalf, he should have liquidated his convention debt promptly and proceeded with an aggressive canvass.

The Greenbackers are represented on the fusion county ticket by C. H. Dewey for Senator, Edward Learnard for Treasurer and Philip H. Dowling for Surveyor. With Mr. Dowling we have no acquaintance but understand that he is well fitted for that position. Chas. H. Dewey has served his township for many years on the Board of Supervisors and has held other offices of trust. He is one of the most respected citizens of the county, and his nomination adds both personal and political strength to the ticket. Mr. Learnard is one of the young farmers of Franklin. He was a pioneer in the Greenback movement and the growth of the party in his township was due in a great measure to his efforts. No better representative of the younger element in the Greenback ranks could have been found. The Greenbackers on the ticket are most excellent men, whom the Democrats will consider it an honor to support.

TEMPERANCE DEPARTMENT.

EDITED BY A COMMITTEE OF THE UNION PROHIBITION PARTY.

Motto:—No License for the Liquor Traffic in any form or for any price.

UNION PROHIBITION TICKET.

For President—John P. St. John, of Kansas.
For Vice Pres't—William Daniel, of Maryland.

THAT ST. JOHN MEETING.

As our readers are undoubtedly aware Gov. John P. St. John visited Adrian on the 7th of Oct., and the event was celebrated by a "prohibition rally." But concerning that meeting, wide differences of opinion seem to be held. Note the following clippings from different papers:

"St. John puts in an appearance here but exists no Particular Enthusiasm." "There is no Special Attendance of People in the City." "To-day had been largely advertised as St. John's day, and it was designed to make the advent here of the Prohibition candidate for the Presidency the occasion for a grand outpouring of his sect. But in this respect the affair was a failure. A fairly busy Saturday would have seen more people in the city."—Adrian Times and Expositor.

St. John. "A Red Letter Prohibition Day. Crowds of Earnest People from all parts of the County. A Presidential Candidate visits us." "The attendance was very large, the grand stand being completely filled with interested listeners, and the fair grounds proper were a living mass of people who were all attention to this living orator"—Adrian Evening Record.

Cold Water Politics. The Presidential Candidate, St. John, at Adrian. He is Royally Received by his Lenawee County Admirers. David Preston and Mosher of Mosherville also on hand. Prayers asked for Prohibition. Adrian, Mich. Oct. 7.—This is a great day for the Lenawee county prohibitionists, and a crowd of people variously estimated at from 7,000 to 10,000 is present to hear John P. St. John and other apostles of prohibition. Evening News Correspondent.

"This afternoon I addressed 10,000 people at Adrian, and that was merely a sample of the gatherings which greet me wherever I go."—St. John's speech at Detroit.

St. John in Adrian. It was expected that Adrian would see a large crowd of people on the 7th, the day that St. John was advertised to speak and the expectations were fully realized. * * * There was an immense crowd on the fair grounds at half past one. The speaking was from a platform on the grand stand which was literally packed with people. The crowd in front of the stand extended out far into the park and fully 8000 people heard St. John deliver a speech of great force and strong logic. If the enthusiasm continues we shall soon begin to find it necessary to recognize it as the only political opponent worthy of notice and battle it accordingly.—Adrian Press.

We appeal to every fair-minded man to judge from these statements and from the testimony of his neighbors, who may have attended that meeting, who did the lying. It must be manifest that the Republican organ of this county is not only sold out to the rum power, but is becoming utterly unreliable as a newspaper. A man who will so pervert the facts in regard to a public meeting cannot be a good guide to follow on political questions of importance.

The whole account of that meeting, the sketch of the address and all as given in the Times, was an absolute misrepresentation of what was said and done. Yet the Times labors in the same issue to convince people that he is for "Temperance," and proceeds to exhort temperance men to vote with his temperance party. A temperance party forsooth, with a beer-guzzler at the head of its chief organ in the enlightened County of Lenawee! God save the mark! People will have to conclude that the Times man got his information in regard to that meeting, out of the saloons. Very true they did not have much of a crowd that day. It was not a good day for them.

A Day of Fasting and Prayer for the Suppression of the Liquor Traffic.

PROHIBITION HEADQUARTERS,
CHICAGO, October 7.

To the People of the United States:

In view of the misery and crime resulting from alcholism and of the guilt fastened on people by governments—municipal, state and national—by permitting and even licensing the traffic in poison drinks, the executive Committee of the Prohibition party call upon the people of this country to observe Wednesday, October 29, as a day of fasting, humiliation and confession, and in view of the fact that many all over the land are aroused and realize the enormity of the liquor crime, and are willing to be at cost and pains to put it away, we call upon all Christian believers to unite in prayer to Almighty God that His aid may be given to measures which will result in the speedy putting away of this guilt and suppression of the traffic in alcoholic drinks.

JOHN B. FINCH, Chairman.

THAT MOSHER PETITION.

Editor Michigan Prohibitionist.

In your issue of Sept. 25, we read a petition addressed to Hon. Chas. Mosher, congregational nominee on the Union ticket, for the Second district of Michigan, requesting him to withdraw his name from the ticket, as he can best serve the cause of the Prohibitionists by so doing, and working in the interest of Capt. Allen. The request is signed by 10 of the citizens of this town, claiming to be Prohibition voters. We wish in all conscience that such might be the case, but it is not. Only one of them is identified as an out-and-out Prohibitionist, and he will speak for himself. There is not one Prohibitionist in this town, or hereabouts, in our opinion, that would desire Mr. Mosher to take such a course. As Prohibitionists, we take distinctive grounds, and while we know that many Republicans claim to be Prohibitionists, and while we are willing to accord due respect to the opinions of others, who may differ with us, yet we do not want it understood that the parties affixing their names to the document above spoken of, in any degree represents the Prohibition sentiment of this place.

We feel proud of Mr. Mosher, as our candidate for congress, and we want to thank him, through the columns of your most excellent paper, for the reply he gave to those gentlemen, and assure him that he will have the hearty support of every true Prohibitionist of this place, at least of those whose names are hereto affixed.

Hudson, Mich., Sept. 29, 1884.

What the Leading Men Say.

Among the leading minds of the country who endorse the Prohibition party and will vote for St. John and Daniel in the present canvass, are such names as the following. Read a few of their utterances:

Rev. Joseph Cook, of Boston. Constitutional Prohibition is a rising tide. I hope to live to see it a successful issue in both state and national politics.

Rev. Jesse B. Thomas, D. D. of Brooklyn. The opportunity seems to be an unmistakably providential one for those who want to root up the upas tree of strong drink, and ought not to be evaded.

Rev. Chas. Deems, D. D., of New York. The one paramount political issue of the day is the destruction of the general liquor traffic. There are a hundredfold more reasons for abolishing the traffic than for abolishing slavery, and the American people will see it yet, and then nothing can restrain them.

Arthur T. Pierson, D. D., of Philadelphia. I am thoroughly convinced that we shall never successfully cope with this gigantic monster except by desperate measures. We must treat liquor selling as we treat other crimes.

Theodore L. Cuyler, D. D., Brooklyn. Preach the two-fold doctrine of moral suppression of the drinking usages, and legal suppression of the dram-shops. The nation is waiting for new and inspiring watchwords, such as civil service reform, overthrow of polygamy, honest government, free education for the negro, and the right of every community to suppress the drinking saloons.

THE PROBATE COURT.

Following is the record of business transacted at the probate court for the week ending October 30, 1884:

The Board of Supervisors.

October 14—The October session of the board of supervisors, opened at the supervisors room in Dean's opera house, at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, a full board being present. The board was called to order by County Clerk Hunter, and the first business undertaken by the board was the election of a chairman. The prominent candidates for the position were Horace Holdridge, democrat, and D. W. Love, republican. Six ballots were taken, without making an election, the vote standing 13 to 13 twice, and 12 to 14 four times. Two members did not vote a portion of the time. Finally a recess was taken, when three more ballots decided the contest in favor of Mr. Love.

The court house committee reported progress on the new court house, after which the board adjourned until 9 o'clock this morning.

Adrian Press: Mr. Isaac Deane of Adrian township has left with us a sample of corn of the white flint variety grown by him this season. It fully sustains the reputation of Michigan for growing fine corn; one of the stalks of only ordinary growth has five fully developed ears of grain of more than ordinary size, most of them being more than a foot in length. Mr. Deane, who is over 72 years of age, has five acres of the above grain which he has raised himself this year, doing all the plowing, planting, cultivating and cutting without help. Pretty good for a man of his years especially as he is not enjoying the best of health.

Adrian Record: The high-joint commission of the school boards of four townships which met to consider the wisdom of carving out a new district for Sand Creek, decided that Sand Creek was putting on too many airs, and refused to chop out the "deestrict."

Morenci Observer: So gratifying was the success of our village fair last week that some of our "solid men" are thinking of investing in the association to the extent of its indebtedness, thus relieving the concern of the last impediment in the way of a grand future of usefulness and prosperity.

The Lenawee County Record is the new weekly edition of the Adrian Record. It is a six column eight page sheet, well filled with local news and presents a very neat typographical appearance. Judging from the initial number it will be a creditable addition to the newspapers of Lenawee county.

Last Thursday evening Mr. Finlay B. Deuel, foreman of Sparta Sentinel, was united in marriage to Miss Loana D. Avery of this village. The groom is one of our Tecumseh boys, who has obtained a good position in a live printing office of Northern Michigan, and the bride is well known here. They departed Thursday evening for their new home. May happiness and success attend them.

The English sparrow is certainly an unmitigated nusance, and should be abated. They have taken complete possession of the trees in this village to the exclusion of every other variety of the chirping feathered tribe. Their annihilation is being discussed in all the larger towns, but how to accomplish it is a matter not easily determined. But all unite in the oppinion that it should be done.

Adrian Record: An Adrian young lady turned on the water of the bath room up stairs and then went to answer a telephone summons. Presently she forgot all about that there was a bath room in the house. The flood was 15 inches deep in the back sitting room down stairs, and still rising when the watery condition of things was discovered. It was at first supposed that there had been a water spout or a dam-break, but finally some one thought of the bath room and rushed up and shut off the flood.

Adrian Record: Holloway children have the toughest kind of constitutions. Take for example the two-and a-half-year-old hopeful of James Ash, who on Tuesday of last week was knocked down and run over by a wagon, weighted with 40 bushels of oats and three persons. The weight flattened the young man to the ground, but he recovered his rotundity like a rubber ball, and beyond having his collar bone cracked and his rennet squeezed considerably, he was not much damaged

Having bought out Mrs. Stout's millinery business Mrs. N. R. Brown kindly invites the ladies of Tecumseh and vicinity to call and look at the new goods.

The origin of the word newspaper is said to be found in the old custom of putting at the head of periodical publications the points of the compass, N. E. W. S., showing that information was given from all parts of the world. But this etymology must be regarded as more ingenious than correct.

An effort is making to raise an endowment fund of Five Thousand Dollars for Raisin Valley Seminary. If twenty-five hundred dollars be pledged before the first day of next July, in this section, the same sum will be given by parties in Ohio. Mr. Swan and R. Hathaway began the canvass last Tuesday and propose to hang to the work until the required Twenty-five Hundred Dollars shall be pledged. They ought to have no trouble in securing that amount.

Adrian Record: From the village on the southern border comes the information through the medium of the Observer, that "on Thursday morning of last week two towering pillars of the M. E. church militant, of this village, got into a first-class altercation over the location of a wood pile, and had a beligerent clinch in which one beloved brother cast forth another dearly beloved brother into the streets." Well, what of it? Can't a man have any fun at all after he becomes a Methodist.

D. Woodward of Clinton, agent of the Niagara White Grape Co., for Clinton, Macon, Tecumseh and vicinity, is receiving orders for vines to be delivered in the spring of 1885. The stock being limited for 1885 delivery, make your order at once. You will get two year old vines under seal of the Co., as all the stock is owned by one company. The price will be kept at present rates for several years; get one or two vines now. Your neighbors will have them as soon as they see yours in bearing, and you can then supply them with vines, double your money, and have the fruit after the Concord is gone. It is said to ripen with the Hartford Prolific and keep to December. I would refer the People of Tecumseh to F. Davidson, H. Osborn, John Fisher, F. Burger, E. G. Cook, and many others that have sampled the fruit and given their orders for vines. Orders taken at Tecumseh by L. M. Mooney.

The litigation which has been pending for several months between the officers of the Clinton Woolen Mill on one side and Edwin R. Smith and others on the other side, has been settled and both suits have been withdrawn. The first suit was commenced by the Mill officers against Mr. Smith to compel him to allow the company to draw water from his race for their use. The second suit was begun by Mr. Smith, Moses Bartlett and other stock holders, and asked for the appointment of a receiver of the company. Judge Stacy and Bean & Underwood appeared for the Woolen Mill officials, and Millard, Weaver & Weaver appeared for Mr. Smith. In the final adjustment the company reserve a strip of land between their mill and Mr. Smith's race and the privilege of tapping the race several rods above the mill to procure clean water. As all suits will be discontinued at once, the Woolen Mills undoubtedly will commence business again at an early day, much to the gratification of the people of Clinton.

The Story of a Hat.

As a distinguishing mark the Tecumseh Blaine and Logan club has adopted a soft gray hat. The hat is attractive in shape and color, and it is not surprising that when Deputy Sheriff John Smith, of Tecumseh, who attended the big republican meetings here on Saturday, stepped into Salsbury and O'Mealy's office, Mr. O'Mealy asked permission to look at his new head gear. The hat suited "Lon's" taste, and being unaware that it was a republican uniform, his admiration led to a desire to purchase. Mr. Smyth is not slow to see the point of a joke, and realizing that to put a republican hat upon a democrat would be an excellent one, he sold Mr. O'Mealy the felt in short order. The purchaser wore his new acquisition about town in all innocence for a time, but, before now, his friends have learned of the sell and are making life a burden for him. Mr. Smyth, meanwhile having secured another hat, has told the tale of his Adrian convert to any number of his Tecumseh friends.—Adrian Times.

A TRIP TO GRAND RAPIDS.

Last week we spent a couple of days in Grand Rapids in attendance upon the Universalist State Convention in session there, having been chosen as delegate from the Tecumseh parish. Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Burlingame were the remaining delegates, both of whom attended the convention also.

We left Tecumseh on the noon train via the M. & O. route, and a fine ride of four hours brought us to Allegan. There connection was made with a train on the C. & W. M. Ry. which sped directly to Grand Rapids where we arrived at 6 o'clock P. M. The arrangement between the M. & O. and Chicago & West Michigan roads is a great convenience to the traveling public. A through coach runs directly from Toledo to Grand Rapids, it being just eight hours run between the two places, making it the shortest and quickest route between these two cities. The C. & W. M. is a first class road in every respect and in connection with the M. & O. forms a direct line from Toledo and points on the M. & O. to Grand Rapids, Muskegon, Pentwater and other places in Northwestern Michigan.

Grand Rapids is a beautiful city and is rapidly increasing in wealth and population. It now has more than 40,000 inhabitants, the census of 1880 showing 33,000. It has over two hundred electric lights, an extensive street railway system, a telephone exchange of over 500 subscribers, several fine hotels, a magnificent Union depot and other metropolitan characteristics.—It is largely engaged in manufacturing, having over 600 separate establishments. The chief industry is the manufacture of furniture. Grand Rapids furniture is known the world over. There are 25 factories engaged in this industry. The furniture factories of the city have clubbed together and raised money with which they will erect a building for their own use at the New Orleans exposition. We had the pleasure of visiting one of the leading establishments, The Berkey & Gay Furniture Co. Jas. Wilcox, head bookkeeper of this House, is a son-in-law of Mrs. E. D. Burlingame, and Mr. and Mrs. B. stopped with him during their stay in the city. Through the kindness of Mr. Wilcox we were shown through the establishment. They have an immense four story warehouse on Canal street which is filled with manufactured goods, and two large factories—one on each side of the river, having about four hundred hands in their employ. During our stay we witnessed the process of paying off the hands in one of the factories.

The convention was held at the church on Pearl street. The Grand Rapids parish is a large and influential one, being second only to the Detroit parish in wealth and numbers among the Universalist churches of the state. Both delegates and visitors were royally entertained, for which great credit is due Mr. E. A. Tredway, chairman of the reception commitee. Mr. Tredway is agent of the "Blue Line" freight, and has an office on Monroe street. Every visitor upon his arrival was taken in charge by Mr. Tredway and assigned to a comfortable temporary home. Our lot fell at the Eagle Hotel. This is a new Hotel located on Waterloo street, kept by J. K. Johnston. The landlord is a most genial gentleman, and his House is overrun with custom. It was crowded to its fullest capacity during our entire stay in the city.—The building is heated by steam and provided with all the modern convienences. The cuisine is unsurpassed and the rates are very modest, for a hotel of that class. We advise Tecumseh people who may visit Grand Rapids to try the Eagle.

During the intervals of leisure between the sessions of the convention we busied ourself in hunting up old acquaintances. We found Dr. H. W. Catlin located in a pleasant office on Monroe street, in one of the best quarters of the business section. Bert is evidently doing well. He is enjoying good health and is well pleased with the outlook. We had two or three brief visits with him which were very pleasant. In his practice he has considerable surgery to attend to; which is not only renumerative but gives a new physician a good reputation. We believe Bert will become a fixture in his present location.

We found C. D. Keyes, son of Danforth Keyes, of Clinton, who kindly took us under his wing and piloted us through one of the Masonic Lodges one evening. Mr. Keyes is now general agent of the Masonic Mutual Benefit Association, and is traveling most of the time in the interests of that Society. He makes his home at Grand Rapids and spends a portion of his time in that city.

C. H. McConnell is book-keeper in Shields, Bulkley and Lemon's wholesale Grocery House. This firm has an extensive establishment near the Union depot and is building up a large trade. Charley has a very pleasant and lucrative position which he can doubtless keep as long as he desires.

Grand Rapids is well supplied with newspapers, having five dailies and several weekly and monthly publications. The Evening Leader is the National organ and is a red hot Butler paper. It is doing valiant service for the fusion cause. It is ably edited and is without doubt the best evening daily in the city. The morning Democrat is the Democratic paper, which is now owned and edited by F. W. Ball. The paper has been greatly improved since Mr. Ball assumed control and now has the largest circulation of any daily in Western Michigan. The Leader and Democrat occupy the same building on Pearl street. The Eagle, Times and Telegram, the three remaining dailies, are all apparently prosperous.

During the last evening of our stay we encountered Dan E. Soper of Newaygo, another old Tecumseh boy. He was on his way to Detroit and we only had a few moments conversation with him. On Friday morning just after breakfast, we had the pleasure of greeting Mr. and Mrs. Finlay Deuel. They arrived at the Eagle the night before, and were on their way to Sparta. We then found out that "Fin" had just become a married man. Taking the train at 9:15 A.M. on the C. & W. M. we had a pleasant ride to Allegan and from there over the M. & O. home, arriving in Tecumseh at 3:37 P. M.

THE ELECTION LAST TUESDAY.

The election held on Tuesday in Ohio and West Virginia resulted substantially as the HERALD prophesied last week. West Virginia has gone Democratic by about 9,000 majority. The early returns indicated about 3,000, but as fuller figures came in this morning the majority has grown to over 9,000 and is still rising. The first reports from Ohio yesterday morning indicated a Republican majority of at least 17,000. The large cities in the state, where "soap" could be freely used all reported Republican gains. The figures this morning, as the rural districts are heard from, show Democratic gains. The majority on the state ticket is now reduced to 10,000 and it is tending downward every hour, with a fair prospect of decreasing to the vanishing point. The Prohibition and Greenback vote were practically nothing. They do not figure in the returns at all, as yet. An enormous vote was polled, the largest ever cast in both states.

The result will be most inspiring to the Democracy for with proper effort on their part during the remaining three weeks of the campaign, the election of Cleveland & Hendricks is assured. The Ohio Democrats received the assault of the combined Republican party and stood like a stone wall. They have their war paint on, and will keep up the fight. In November they will be the assaulting party and they have resolved to carry the electorial vote of Ohio for Cleveland & Hendricks. If Blaine, with his enormous advantage, loses 10,000 majority in a Republican state, how can he expect to carry states which are properly Democratic, like New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Indiana, or debatable states like Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois, California and Nevada?

Crazy Work and Sane Work.

We were asked lately to join in a raffle for a "crazy" quilt made up of nine thousand scraps of silk and satin set together with much ingenuity of design and niceness of stitching. To the maker and her friends it appeared a monumental labor of taste, industry and artistic talent. To us it stood for a misdirected energy and perseverence too common among women. If it cost but ten minutes to add one scrap to another—an allowance far too small—the quilt represented an outlay of fifteen hundred hours, one hundred and twenty-five working days of twelve solid hours each, or one hour a day for more than four years.

What might not this industrious young woman have accomplished in that time? If she really cared for decorative art, fifteen hundred hours of close study and practice would have developed an admirable and remunerative skill in embroidery or painting. They would have sufficed for the acquisition of a modern language, a sound knowledge of history, poetry, literature, art, music. They might have been exchanged for the important science of housekeeping and kitchen chemistry. Devoted to educational work, their helpful influence could not be reckoned.

The craze for decorative art has wrought certain definite mischiefs with much good. One harm is that busy idleness has been made to seem improving. Cross-stitch dogs with bead eyes on rugs, and parrots in high relief on lamp mats, are now distinctly recognized and shunned as survivors of a "chromo civilization"—wasters of time and slayers of taste. But the makers of Kensington-stitch table-cloth borders, Holbein towel ends, "decorative" waste-baskets, pen-wipers, flat-iron covers, lamp shades, and "gray patchwork" seem to have eaten of the insane root that takes the reason prisoner. Their countless stitches and ugly ingenuity appear to them the fit expression of æsthetic instincts, and they give thanks that they live in the cultivated age which ornaments its whisk-broom holders. Raphael and Leonardo would never have thought of that.

It is the chief misfortune and limitation of women that their aims are petty. When these are conscientiously petty, as in the misguided struggle for decoration, it is naturally difficult to substitute larger ones. The cumulative teaching of all time having been that women should be satisfied with patchwork, mental, moral and manual, it is perhaps unreasonable to expect them to repudiate it. But most women have ambitions, if not aspirations. And most women need to be reminded that the time they daily industriously waste would do for them what it does for men—conquer new worlds.

Last winter a great historian died. His last book, The Conquest of England, was published after his death. For years he had been struggling for life enough to finish the great work he had planned to do. He seized every opportunity of momentary strength, of relaxation from pain, to write. His preceding volume, The Making of England, had been written in the shadow of death. His wife says, in her tender preface, that it was the opinion of his physicians that life was prolonged from day to day, throughout that time, "only by the astonishing force of his own will, by the constancy of a resolve that had wholly set aside all personal aims." It was only when the pen fell from his exhausted hand that he said: "I am weary; I can do no more." "With such sustained zeal, such eager conscientiousness, was his work done, that much of it was wholly rewritten five times." The books themselves are of profound interest, admirable in matter and in manner. But no tale in them is more heroic than the patient, persistent toil that achieved them, in spite of suffering, weakness and natural sorrow.

They who say that civilization waits for the advancement of women entreat them to prefer the intellectual life. But this does not imply constant companionship with books. It was a wise and good saying that "the essence of intellectual living lies not so much in extent of knowledge or in perfection of expression as in the constant preference of higher thoughts over lower." The patient student and historian John Richard Green may stand for one class, the patient contriver and piecer of the "crazy quilt" for the other. It is not high qualities that women lack; it is high directions.—Harper's Bazar.

Electrical Oddities.

The big Roosevelt organs in the gallery are run by Edison motors, which are supplied with electricity from a dynamo off the north end of the structure. The current of fluid makes the armature revolve, to the end of which is fastened a wheel, to which the belt of the organ pump is adjusted. The Daft motor is diiferent. It has a worm armature, that is, it is threaded like a screw. This prevents it working too rapidly. Then the end turns upon a bur-wheel, which, in turn, further reduces the rapidity of the revolution and contributes less motion to the wheel of the machinery motor. It is very ingenious. The press which prints the Electrical World is run by one of these motors. Few motors have arrangements for regulating speed. A young man named Moore has a curious little contrivance for accomplishing this result. Wanamaker has a tailor shop exhibit, the twenty machines of which are run by motors. Upon the fly-leaf of each machine lies a little iron box about six inches square, with a wire running into it. It has no motion and looks useless but from its lead wires which drive the machine at a high rate of speed. It is the Cleveland motor. Then, besides, a shoe-sewing machine is also run by one of the little iron boxes. Over in the exhibit of the United States Company great iron drills and planes are run by motors. The strangest use to which the electric motor has been applied is tooth pulling. A dentist in Brooklyn has arranged a complete machine, which will lessen human suffering. A pair of forceps protrude from a nickel tube, which is connected with a wire. The forceps are applied to the aching ivory, then the operator touches a spring, a spiral arrangement within the tube winds up in a wink, draws down the forceps like a flash, and in an instant the tooth is jerked from the jaw and cast upon the floor. This Brooklyn dentist has pulled as many as seven teeth in five seconds. He fixed an electrical forceps to each grinder to be removed. Then he touched the springs rapidly in succession, and the patient's mouth was as toothless as a babe's. One use of the motors is highly appreciated at the exposition. That is when they turn fans. The building was very warm on Saturday. Upon the Edison parlor table stood an ornamented fan, which revolved between 4,000 and 5,000 times a minute and created a most refreshing breeze.—Philadelphia Press.

Overcoats for Good Dressers.

The single-breasted, fly-front sack, commonly called the "Chesterfield," is the coat par excellence, and will be worn by twenty good dressers where one of any other shape will be seen. In its present form it is a most desirable and beautiful over-garment. For a man of average height the length varies from thirty-nine to forty-two inches, according to the weight of material; the heavy weights, of course, being the longer. They are made to trace the form distinctly, but are not cut so close-fitting as a year ago. The lapels and collar are light; they are made to roll free, and have, as a rule, the silk to show to the end of collar. Velvet collars are extensively used with heavy-weight goods.

Next in popularity comes the Newmarket, the form of which is the same as during the previous season, followed by the surtout, which is of medium length and closes high, and by the box coat, which, made with a fly, will be occasionally seen, but will generally be made double-breasted, with the buttons well backed from the edge, with heavy collar and lapels, and wide flaps on all pockets; edges double stitched wide, and seams laid over and stitched to match the edges.

But the select thing, the overcoat of the club man, the society leader, the genuine swell, is the cape coat in some form. The most popular of these coats is the Inverness—the Inverness pure and simple, just as it was many years ago, and many years ago before them. It is a noble garment, with graceful, flowing lines, which seem to add inches to a man, as well as importance. A splendid garment, that costs a great deal of money, and requires for its successful production the skill of first-class artists.

The ordinary Chesterfield elongated, with a full shoulder cape, will also be worn, more or less, by expensive dressers, but will not be so popular as the Inverness.—American Fashion Review.

Work for Anti-Vivisectors.

The struggle of the scientific investigator against natural forces in some degree resembles the struggle of a people for its liberty. Material laws bind us on all sides, and to secure deliverance from them it is necessary to become acquainted with them. It is our liberty as against the things it is necessary to conquer: and it is not a dear bargain to buy this at the price of a few dogs and a few skinned frogs.

The sentimental spirits who are so much interested in the lot of our victims seem to believe that there is no more important occupation for them. We must undeceive them. There are more pains than joys among the men on this little terrestrial globe. Instead of busying themselves to prevent the researches which are being privately carried on in a few laboratories, let these charitable people make an effort to put down the slave-trade, of which the negroes are the victims by thousands. Or let them endeavor to relieve the misery which prevails everywhere from Greenland to the land of the Hottentots. Let them try to suppress the terrible scourge of war, which has made a hundred thousand times more human victims than all the frogs, rabbits and dogs that have been sacrificed by all the physiologists in the world. There is a task worthy of their activity.—Charles Richet, in Popular Science Monthly.

Wouldn't Take Him.

"Will this road take me to Atlanta?" asked a traveler of a "cracker."

"No, sir-ree," replied the countryman, "narry a time."

"That's strange," mused the first speaker. "A man told me a few hours ago that it would."

"He lied, stranger; I've been hyar twenty y'ars, and I hain't seed it tuck nobody annywhar yit; and I don't s'pose she ever will long as folks kin ride an' walk."

"Well, if I follow the road I'll get there, won't I?" smilingly asked the traveler.

"Not much; fer ye kain't foller it, kase she don't move, an' ye kain't foller nothin' what don't move along in fron't of ye."

"But if I travel this route I'll soon reach the city, I reckon."

"Then ye struck it, mister; jes' keep a movin' the way yer go'n an' ye'll git thar after awhile. Mornin' to ye."—Atlanta Constitution.

Baskets to Hold Water.

The Eastern papers speak of the splendid uses of the willow fiber for spinning and weaving into cloth, and it is said to be better than hemp or flax. But there is a kind of willow tree that grows on the north slope of the high mountains about eighty miles east of Los Angeles, on the border of the Colorado desert, which is used by the Cabazon Indians to make baskets, light and impervious to water. They are better than any tin, galvanized iron, or any other kind of a receptacle for water. They are used extensively by Mexicans and old settlers, and last, with constant use, a dozen or fifteen years. They are made quickly by the deft fingers of these Indians, and are sold chiefly to tourists, merchants and regular customers. This is a peculiar product of the Pacific coast, and not only a novelty to Eastern people, but also to a great many Californians who do not live where they have ever seen them.—Los Angeles Herald.

The Voice of the People.

The people, as a whole, seldom make mistakes, and the unanimous voice of praise which comes from those who have used Hood's Sarsaprilla, fully justifies the claims of the proprietors of this great medicine. A CURE FOR GRAVEL.

A Common and Painful Complaint—A Statement you may Confide in.

It seems to have been reserved for Dr David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., to accomplish, through his preparation which is known as KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, what others have failed to compass. The subjoined letter will be found of vital interest to sufferers from gravel and to the general public:

ALBANY, March 29, 1884.

Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

Dear Sir—Let me tell you frankly that I have never been partial to proprietary medicines, as I believe the majority of them to be nothing better than obtaining money from people when suffering makes ready to catch at any hope of relief. They are mean cheats and delusions. But your Favorite Remedy I know by happy experience to be a totally different thing. I had been a sufferer from gravel for years, and had resorted to many eminent physicians for relief, but no permanent good came of it. About three years ago your Favorite Remedy was recommended to me. I can give you the result in a sentence: I tried it and it cured me completely. I am confident it saved my life. You can use this letter if you think best.

Yours, etc.,
NATHAN ACKLEY.

As a medicine for all diseases of the blood, liver, kidneys and digestive organs, Kennedy's Favorite Remedy has fairly won its high reputation. Write if desirable to Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

DIED.

Death is like the horse leech at the vein. "Its cry is Give, Give." By its ravages land marks are removed. Pioneers disappear. Family and social circles are entered and circumscribed. In the death of Mrs. Horatio Bartlett, which occured on the 29th. ult., Clinton has lost a much loved and useful neighbor. By her gentle and unassuming manner she had endeared herself to many, beside, those who more particularly understood her nervous and debilitated condition. At the particular request of the family, her former Pastor the Rev. W. P. Wastell assisted by the resident Pastor, the Rev. E. W. Miller, conducted her funeral services, at her late home. The sermon was preached from 2nd. Corinthians, 12-9. "My strength is made perfect in weakness," and was an illustration of literal facts, in the personal experience of the dear deceased, who now sleeps in the rural cemetery of her favorite village, until the resurrection of the just. Mrs. Horatio Bartlett, formerly Miss Catharine McFarlane, was born in Carlisle, Penn., July 1st, 1830. The father was the Rev. Alex McFarlane a presbyterian minister, and professor of Greek and Latin. He traveled thro' the eastern states in quest of health. In 1838 he brought his wife and four little girls to Clinton, Mich., where he purchased part of the farm now owned by Mr. McDougal, two miles north of Clinton. Two days after this transaction Mr. McFarlane died of consumption. At the end of one year his widow died of the same disease. Thus the four children were left orphans, but the God of the Fatherless proved a father to them all. The marriage of Mr. McDougal to the eldest daughter afforded a roof tree to the sorrowing ones, and from that time the maiden sister of the Rev. Alex McFarlane, Miss Mary McFarlane, has proved a foster mother indeed. All honor to Aunt Mary. At the age of 20, the subject of this notice, joined the Congregational church in Clinton, and has ever adorned her profession. She was married to Horatio Bartlett, Feb. 18, 1850. She was a faithful wife and a loving mother to her son and daughter, who with their bereaved Father now mourn their loss, sorrowing but not without hope. For years Mrs. Bartlett has been a consumptive subject, but bore her almost incessant afflictions with resignation and christian magnanimity. Her death had been expected, but came suddenly at last. In her case all was peace, and tired nature evidently yielded because worn out. She fell asleep in Jesus. The funeral occasion was tender and impressive, attended by a large assemblage of relatives, friends and neighbors. In this connection the entire family would render thanks to all who have made them debtors by their sympathy and unremitting attentions.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

Tuesday evening, Oct. 7th, Hon. J. Clark of Hastings, talked tariff and its attendant blessings to a mixed audience of republicans, democrats and women, numbering less than two thousand. The speaker was not bashful, but there was a conspicuous lessness of confidence in his party winning a glorious victory, than was manifested by political speekers four years ago, and all the enthusiasm would not make a smile for the days before Grant lost his money. It was a very decorous meeting, and Mr. C. talked fast, plain and pleasant of the country that twenty four years ago escaped from Democratic rule with war on its hearth, and depleted treasury, to bathe in the light of freedom and judicious taxation, has developed universal wealth and filled to the brim the national coffer.

Taking off three per cent of the tax on wool was a blunder chargeable to the democrats, and injured farmers by permitting coarse, south American wools and Australian fleeces, that cost nothing but sunshine, to enter the market and crowd out finer and expensive home grades. Butler, he asserted, was the highest protective tax-gatherer of all, but two presidents had died, suddenly as it were, and if the general should be elected and follow his predecessors example the chief office would be filled by Mr. West, who was a rebel, and then what would happen? He did not tell, but if the other three cents wool tax should slip off, and getting drunk become any easier, Brooklyn could not hold together when wild west shows are expected. He advised prohibitionists to unite with republicans, for in no other way could temperance be secured. More whiskey was sold in Kansas now than ever before, showing plainly that prohibition does not prohibit, and though St. John is a good moral man, he is not the man for President.

Mr. Clark is an agreeable speaker. Somebody pays the expenses of such men who are sent out to enlighten people about main issues, side issues and mercy knows what all, so men may not remain in the quandry of not knowing what or how to vote. The somebody has a right to his money's worth, and those, who go to listen save instruction and not illusion. The prosperity of working people is the harp of a thousand strings, just now out of tune, and not quite all political fancy paints it. If England finds free trade its only remedy for making its pauper laborers self-supporting, why not submit ours to the same discipline? Why boast of a full treasury and insist on taxing high enough to defray expenses of war in the long after peace. It looks as if a party that can descend to sugar coat such arguments had converted both main and side issues into twaddle, and relied on a noble name from which vitality has been leached, and the prohibitionist who can sift anything out of such doctrine to further the temperance cause, has an undoubted right to his discovery.

Rev. J. M. Kerridge, of Clinton, will address the Union club at Ridgeway village next week Wednesday evening. Subject, The prohibition of the liquor traffic.

Mr. Lozier the "Fighting Chaplain" of Iowa, who is under pay by the Republicans to whip into line the prohibitionists had a good audience in the hall last Saturday evening. He convinced the prohibitionists they were doing the right thing, just what he would do if a Michigan man. He disappointed the Republicans and surely insulted the ladies who were present. So it was a bad job all around.

Rev. G. W. Hudson's address to the Union club on Tuesday evening was perhaps the finest political speech we have yet listened to. It carried conviction with it and it being entirely free from any abuse or falsification made a striking contrast with the effort of Mr. Lozier.

The party who desecrated the grave of Rev. Thomas Lupton, in the Ridgeway Cemetery, by taking therefrom a Floral design, are requested to replace the same, without delay, and there will be no more said regarding the theft. Feeling that we are under the protection of the law, we deem it our privilege to insist upon our rights viz. that the resting places of our dead shall be left unmolested. We are not the only ones annoyed in this way, and as these parties are becoming pretty well known, we would advise them to consider their ways, and be wise. COM.

HOLLOWAY HICKUPS.

Last Saturday morning Fred Kopka hitched a spirited young horse to his carriage and tied it to the post in the yard while he went into the house to bid Hannah and the baby good-bye. In the meantime the horse concluded that he was wanted at Holloway and made a break for liberty. By the time he had got to the road the buggy and harness were completely demolished. Fortunately, however, the horse escaped without injury, and as Fred has just shipped some hogs he expects to have his money back in a few days.

Uncle Ned Broadbent had a pretty close call on Monday last. He was working in a well for Moses Bowerman and had got down about ten feet when it suddenly caved in burying him up to the waist. Help was immediately summoned and by putting a rope around his body and doing some pretty vigorous pulling he was got out safe and sound. Better to be born lucky than rich.

Dr. Wilson of Hanover, made Dr. Begel a visit on Tuesday.

Democratic rally and pole raising on Friday next.

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

The Wilberforce Grand Concert Co., as was announced gave a concert at Town Hall, on Wednesday evening the 15th, which was fine as far as the singers were concerned but we are sorry to say the concert was not patronized as well as it should have been. The receipts were very light.

Alonzo Clark is absent from home. He is spending some little time with his daughter, Mrs. Baker, at Chicago. His son E. A. Clark, is attending to the business of the Bank during his father's absence.

Our enterprising Clothier, Jno E. McCollum has a nice large new stock of goods, and he has them very nicely arranged in the large brick store on the north side of Chicago street, where he is having a nice trade, and he reports No. 1, and improving. He sells for cash.

The future of Clinton is assured as we are to have a skating rink. We noticed as we passed the old and familiar place of D. H. Silvers, several men at work demolishing the inside of the building, and when asked what all this meant, the reply was we are going to have a skating rink. The work has now progressed so far that with the help they have, they will soon have the new floor in, when it will be ready for use, and now who can tell what the future possibilities of Clinton will be with the skating rink and the woolen mills both in operation.

We notice our enterprising citizen E. F. Muir is building an addition to his tenement on Church street.

The printings office talked of for some time past is now assuming shape and will ere long begin business with as we understand, Chas. Spafford as manager, and Blosser of the Manchester Enterprise as motive power. Success to the new enterprise.

Politics are getting warmed up very preceptibly. The Democrats will have speaking in the Town Hall on Thursday evening of this week by Whitman & Manley. Turn out and hear them, they are said to be good speakers. Prohibition on Friday eve.

Rev. E. W. Miller has resigned his pastorate of the Congregational church of this place and has accepted the agency of the State Sunday school. Resignation to take effect Nov. 1st. Success attend him.

The Baptist minister of this place will move his family to Clinton during next week, and will occupy the new parsonage.

Robt. Codling, former machinist and engineer in the Clinton Woolen Mill here, left Clinton on Wednesday morning last for Peru, Ind., where he accepts a similar position in a woolen mill at that place, where he will ere long remove his family.

Mr. and Mrs. James St. John formerly of this place but now of Jonesville are visiting the old homestead and friends here during last week. They were the guests of Dea. Downs while here.

The suit commenced by the village corporation for violation of the village ordinances was allowed to go down by the complainant.

The marriage of our friend David Haggart on Wednesday afternoon caused considerable comment by the old ladies. Is she good looking?

Henry Lancaster, proprieter of the Clinton Hotel has put in some new windows on the west side of the Hotel which adds very much to the looks and appearance of the Lancaster House. A much and long needed improvement. May he never darken the windows and may he also discard the card table.

We notice S. Brown is making some improvements on the old Chandler property, among which is the digging of a well, the old well having failed to supply good water.

J. S. Kies, the president of the Clinton Woolen Mill has gone east on business connected with the above institution, indications of resumption of business as we hope in the near future.

Mrs. Dr. Reeves (Sylvanus Howell's daughter) will soon join her husband in Texas whither he had gone to find a location to commence business in the healing art. Success attend them.

The ladies of St. John's church Episcopal, will hold their social at the residence of Mrs. J. S. Clark. From the known hospitality and faculty of Mrs. and Miss Clark we predict a large company and a good time generally. So may it be. Geo. will be there.

The ministers were all out of town this week when wanted to launch a couple into matrimony. Call on the Esquire.

For St. John, on General Principles.

"We're for St. John, hain't we, Mary?" remarked a western bound passenger as a little party of travelers began to talk politics. His wife, a cheery, happy-looking woman, looked up with a smile on her face and nodded assent.

"Why are we for St. John?" continued the husband. "Well, I'll tell you. We have a pow'ful reason or two for bein' for him, hain't we Mary? We're from Tennessee, you know. Goin' out to Iowa to see Mary's Mother. I'm a Southerner; my wife's a Northern gir. 'Bout four years ago we were running a little farm of our own. It wa'n't all paid for, either. Worst of it was I was a powerful drinker. Old Jem Williams kept store half a mile from our place, an' he sold likker. I spent all my time an' all my money there, didn't I, Mary? Everything was sold off the place, an' a mortgage comin' du to boot. Our horses, wagon, cows, everything, went down to old Jem Williams'. Guess there wasn't much to eat in the house, either, was there, Mary? All of a sudden old Jem shut down on likker. Wouldn't sell a drop; said the school house law had come down on him, and the women were watching night and day. That was a new thing in them parts an' we old topers inquired into it. We found that no likker could be sold within four miles of a school house. My wife here had gone to work an' got some other women interested, an' they built a school house themselves out of an old corn crib. Then they called on the officers to enforce the law. They appointed committees to watch old Jem and pull him up if he violates the statute. Then we had to go six miles to get our likker, and the first thing we knowed there was a school house there too. In six weeks we could not get a drink in the county, all owing to this Northern wife of mine, wasn't it Mary? We had to sober up—no help for it. I went to work and saved my farm from the mortgage. Pretty soon I had a good team, and we began to prosper again. Curiosest thing about it was there was school all winter in that corn crib school house. My wife taught it. Me and a lot more men attended. There I learned to read, write and figure—something I never knew about before. Now, I don't know whether votin' for or even electing St. John would do any good or not, but we are for him on general principles, ain't we Mary?"

WILD ROSE.

"The best laid plans of men and mice,"
The poet says, "gang aft agley,
And though a poet sometimes lies,
In this case truth holds sway.

There was a man, deep in whose soul
Poesie fa ices held sway.
His name was Rose, a pleasant name
With hope or ease of grace.

Unto this Rose the angels brought
A dear, delightful child,
A very bud of promise, and Too rather called her "Wild."

A WILD Rose, then, she was to all,
The sweetest flower that bloomed and grew
On breezy hill or in woody dell,
Midst dazzles kissed by dew.

The years were numbered one by one
With much of ill and much of good,
Until our Wild Rose, fresh and fair,
Blushed into womanhood.

And then there came the lowering clouds
Of circumstance, the murky fog
Of actual life, and she was wed—
Her husband's name was Hogg.

THE STEERING OF BALLOONS.

Excitement Caused by the Recent Experiment at Meudon—An Alleged Success—The History of Aeronautics—Distinguished Services of Gambetta.

No little excitement has been caused in France by the news that a successful experiment in balloon-steering has been performed at Meudon, near Paris. We are unable to judge the importance of the alleged invention, for its authors are the two military officers in command of the Government aerostatic works, which were instituted under M. Gambetta's auspices, and the technical secrets of their contrivance have, of course, been disclosed to the War Office only. As already reported, the experiment was tried in calm weather and with a balloon of elliptical form, which carried an electric motor, a screw and a rudder. The motor is said to be composed of accumulators which can supply during four hours the power of ten horses, and they are moved by the screw which serves as a propeller to the apparatus. The balloon was made of light, strong silk, and was covered as usual with a netting, to which the car was suspended. All the propelling mechanism was contained within the car, the rudder alone projecting outside, like that of a boat. The car was mounted by Captain Renard, director of the balloon-works, and by his assistance, Captain Krebs, both engineer officers. On being released from the earth the balloon at once rose to a height of about 1800 feet, and, urged by a swift rotary movement to the screw, made a straight course for the Hermitage of Villebon, about seven miles distant as the crow flies. A wind was moving against it at a speed of about eighteen feet a second. Captain Renard worked the propeller, Captain Krebs steered. Villebon had been fixed upon as the goal of the journey, and when this place was reached Captain Krebs waved a flag as a signal that he was going to turn. The spectators, who were a party of officers with some passers-by, attracted by the sight of the balloon, was then amazed and delighted to see the balloon gracefully describe a curve of three hundred meters radius and sail back to Meudon." On approaching the lawn from which the ascent had been made, the balloon ascended in oblique direction and with a steady motion, showing that the engine was completely under Captain Renard's control. When within twenty feet of the ground the machine was eased, reversed, stopped, and a rope being thrown out from the car, the balloon was hauled gently down and touched earth without the slightest shock. The whole journey had occupied about forty minutes.

Such is the description of an experiment on which the Academy of Sciences has so far beencalled upon to offer only congratulations, but no criticism. Without expressing an opinion—since we have no data for doing so—on the value of an invention which has not been submitted to public scrutiny, we may briefly recall what has been the progress of aeronautics since the first balloon rose into the air a little more than a century ago. At this time last year the town of Annonay was celebrating the centenary of ballooning by the inauguration of a monument to the brothers Etienne and Joseph Montgolfier; but the first practical idea as to aerial navigation may be credited to an eccentric character who lived in the seventeenth century, Cyrano de Bergerac. Cyrano wrote a number of fantastic books which were consulted by Swift for his "Gulliver," by Voltaire for his "Micromegas," and by Fontenelle for his "Mondes." In the most popular of these, a "Trip Through the Moon," the hero is made to ascend from the earth by means of bladders filled with hot air. The Montgolfiers improved upon this notion by substituting one globe of silk for several bladders; in other respects their balloon was an adaptation of Bergerac's idea, for it had an aperture at its base into which hot air rose from a charcoal stove in the car. The first hot-air balloon was sent up on the 5th of June, 1783, without a car. In August of the same year an engineer named Charles started a balloon inflated with hydrogen gas. In September the Montgolfiers launched a new fire-balloon with a car in which were placed a sheep, a cock and a duck, who all returned safe to land; and in October the first human aeronaut, M. Francois Pilatre des Rozier, who was afterward killed in crossing from France to England, ascended in a captive balloon tethered to the earth by ropes. In November this adventurous gentleman made his first ascent in a free balloon, and went up to a height of three thousand feet—an achievement which excited the wildest enthusiasm and the most fanciful anticipations. All the practical scientists of Europe became smitten with a craze for aerial navigation; books and pamphlets on the subject were published by the score, and it was believed that a method for steering balloons would be contrived without much difficulty.

The first ascent in England was made from Woolwich in November, 1783; in 1784 a Sig. Lunard started in a balloon from Moorfields, and in 1785 Mr. Blanchard and Dr. Jeffries performed their famous journey from Dover to Calais in two hours. After this no distinct advance was made in ballooning until 1821, when Mr. Green used ordinary coal-gas instead of hydrogen for inflating purposes. The manufacture of hydrogen had been troublesome and expensive, but the substitution of coal-gas enabled balloons to be blown at a comparatively small cost, and from this time they became popular objects of amusement in public gardens. The famous trips of the great "Nassau" balloon, which went up from Vauxhall Gardens in 1836, are still remembered by many living persons with wonder. The "Nassau" was 107 feet in circumference, its full height from car to summit was 80 feet; it was made of 200 yards of crimson and white silk, and contained 70,000 cubic feet of gas. Nine persons could be carried in its car. On one of its first voyages it descended in the Duchy of Nassau, having traveled about five hundred miles in eighteen hours. From Mr. Green's days until now no genuine advance has been made in ballooning. There have been innumerable ascents with many accidents, though not so many of these as might have been expected; and some of these ascents undertaken for scientific ends have yielded interesting observations on atmospheric phenomena. Mr. Glaisher and Mr. Coxwell nearly lost their lives in mounting to a height of nearly 29,000 feet, but, notwithstanding the information obtained from Mr. Glaisher's ascents, the British Association for the Advancement of Science has suffered aeronautical investigation to drop out of their programme. Before dismissing a subject which has always been fraught with the greatest interest, and which, indeed, exercises something like fascination upon every mind, the Association had been fairly harried by papers on balloon-steering from inventors of the kind who have not yet given up trying to square the circle, and we believe the patents that have been taken out for various contrivances in aeronautics can hardly be numbered. However, the problem of balloon-steering has never been regarded even by scientists of the first order as insoluble in theory; it is only in practice that experiments have failed, because it has not yet been found possible to construct a motor combining power with lightness.

If the experiment made at Meudon should prove to be a genuine success, the credit of the new discovery, which opens up an endless vista of possibilities to the imagination, will rest with M. Gambetta, whose faith in the future of aerial navigation could never be quenched. It was he, who, when President of the budget commission in 1878, persuaded the Chambers permanently to endow the Meudon balloon works, which had been instituted for occasional experiments, after the Franco-German war. Balloons were used for military operations in France as early as the battle of Fleurus, in 1794. On this occasion the French employed them to watch the movements of the enemy. The balloons sent out from Paris during the siege of 1870-1 served only to keep the capital in communication with the Provinces. M. Gambetta, who was carried safely toward Tours in one of them, and who was able thereby to organize the National defense, remained unshakable in the opinion that the secret of balloon-steering would be discovered if only a sufficient sum of money was bestowed ungrudgingly on experiments. After the war, an Aeronautical Commission under M. Duphy de Lome was appointed. This distinguished engineer had been director of the Aeronautical Department during the siege, and we must remember that in 1871 he described to the Academy of Sciences a steerable balloon, which was said at the time to be as marvelous an invention as that just made by Captains Renard and Krebs. But, when put to serious tests, this invention was soon found to be useless, and similar failures attended machines subsequently tried by MM. Gillard and Dissandier. It seemed as if some of the balloons were steerable because they got into atmospheric currents going in the direction where their rudders steered. The currents which prevail near the earth's surface afford no signs as to the direction of those in the higher strata of the atmosphere, and it more than once happened that a balloon, raising in its first flight above the course of a contrary wind, appeared to obey the propulsion of the rudder, because it had got suddenly into a current flowing in a different direction. The Government ended by losing its interest in experiments which, after so often being proclaimed as successful, ended in disappointment; and nothing but M. Gambetta's sheer pertinacity wrung from the Chamber of Deputies the grant requisite for carrying on such experiments indefinitely. Captain Renard, the director of the Meudon works, has devoted most of his life to ballooning, and the French Government have certainly treated him very well in placing space, money and scientific appliances of all sorts at his disposal without stint. He has been assisted throughout his labors by a picked staff from the corps of engineers.—London Times.

Boston and New York.

As the car swung into Madison avenue from Forty-second street two ladies got aboard. One of them wore glasses and that intellectual contraction of the eyebrows peculiar to the ladies of the Hub. With the true Boston instinct she began talking about books and authors.

"You have read 'Jane Eyre,' of course?" said her companion.

"Oh, yes," said the intellectual lady from Boston. "I have read all her works and like them so much."

The other lady coughed behind her handkerchief and then asked, with a twinkle in her eye: "Have you ever read any of Daniel Deronda's novels?"

"Yes, indeed," said the Boston lady, "all of them. But do you know I think he is almost too analytical?"

"How do you like Adam Bede's writings?" asked the New Yorker.

"Oh, they are lovely. But don't you think they are a little shallow?"

"I have never read them," said the other, behind her fan.

The lady from Boston cast a look of pity on her illiterate companion and the two got off the car at Sixty-first street.—N. Y. Herald.

AYER'S Cherry Pectoral.

No other compounds are so insidious in their approach as those affecting the throat and lungs, none so to be dreaded by the majority of sufferers. The ordinary cough of cold, resulting perhaps from a trifling or "timely" exposure, is often but the beginning of a fatal endeavor. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has been in constant use for more than forty years, and is held in the highest esteem by the people of every country of the civilized world. It can be taken in all cases with perfect safety.

A Terrible Cough Cured.

[illegible] Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which removed the last symptom of my complaint, namely, a cough so severe as to render me unable to speak or sleep. I feel that I owe my life to the use of your medicine, and shall always recommend it to those in need of a pulmonary medicine. I remain, yours, [illegible] BROTHER."

Rockingham, Vt., July 15, 1882.

Croup.—A Mother's Tribute.

[illegible] in the country [illegible] my three-year-old, was taken down with croup. It seemed as if he would not live a single hour. One of the family suggested the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, a bottle of which was kept in the house. He was given up to die, all agreed, but I thought I would try the Pectoral as a last hope, and to our delight it relieved the child instantly, and he slept quietly the entire night, from which he fully recovered. We feel that we can never be sufficiently grateful." Mrs. EMMA GUINEY.

159 West 125th St., New York, May 10, 1882.

"I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my family for several years, and have found it the best medicine for coughs and colds that we have ever tried." A. S. CRANE.

Lake Crystal, Minn., March 10, 1882.

"I suffered for eight years from Bronchitis, and [illegible] relief only by the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral." JOSEPH WALDEN.

Lynn, Mass., April 5, 1882.

"I can't say enough in praise of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It [illegible] me, as I feel that but for its use I should long since have died [illegible]." F. FRANKLIN.

Palestine, Texas, April 22, 1882.

No case of an affection of the throat or lungs exists which cannot be greatly relieved by the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and it will always cure when the disease is not already beyond the control of medicine.

ALBANY, March 30, 1884.

Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

Dear Sir—Let me tell you frankly that I have never been partial to proprietary medicines, as I believe the majority of them to be nothing better than obtaining money from people whom suffering makes ready to catch at any hope of relief. They are mean cheats and delusions. But your Favorite Remedy I know by happy experience to be a totally different thing. I had been a sufferer from gravel for years, and had resorted to many eminent physicians for relief, but no permanent good came of it. About three years ago your Favorite Remedy was recommended to me. I can give you the result in a sentence: I tried it and it cured me completely. I am confident it saved my life. You can use this letter if you think best. Yours, etc.,

TERRIFIC GAS EXPLOSION.

A Gas Explosion in a Bank Vault—Hon. John Arnot, President of the Bank, and Present Member of Congress, Fatally Burned.

ELMIRA, N. Y., October 21.—The residents of this city were thrown into a state of great excitement yesterday morning by the report that John Arnot, the millionaire banker, and present member of Congress from this district, had been killed by a gas explosion at his bank. A great crowd of excited and alarmed citizens hurried to the scene and soon the building was surrounded. About nine o'clock in the morning those living in the vicinity of the bank were startled by a loud explosion resembling the discharge of heavy artillery. Nearly every window in the building was shattered by the concussion while in some instances the window sashes were blown out. A subsequent examination showed that the doors of the vaults were twisted and broken, the locks torn off, and other damage done in various parts of the bank, so fearful was the force of the explosion.

At the time of the accident there were in the bank Congressman Arnot and several clerks. Mr. Arnot had gone into the vault to open the inside safe preliminary to commencing the day's business. It seems that the gas had not been turned off on Saturday and had been pouring into the vault from the time the bank closed on that day until Monday morning. Arnot struck a match to enable him to see, and almost instantly there was a terrific explosion. Arnot was hurled from the vault ten feet and struck against the cashier's desk on the opposite side of the room.

When picked up he was almost unrecognizable. His clothes were torn from his body and his face burned and blackened. His whiskers and hair were completely burned off, but, strange to say, he still retained consciousness. The first one to approach him was one of the clerks, to whom Mr. Arnot said that there was no need of sending for a doctor. A doctor was sent for, however, and Mr. Arnot was carried into the private office. The doctor soon arrived and made a superficial examination. He found no serious injuries but expressed the fear that Mr. Arnot had received internal injuries and also that he would lose the sight of one if not both eyes.

He was taken home, and the result of a further examination are anxiously awaited. He is one of the most popular and respected men in the city, and much sympathy is felt for him. He was to entertain Ex-Speaker Randall, who spoke in Elmira last night.

LATER—At two o'clock in the afternoon Mr. Arnot was resting quietly under the influence of opiates. It has been found since that his injuries are much more serious than at first stated, but his physicians say that if he rallies from the shock they have no doubt of his ultimate recovery.

GOVERNOR CLEVELAND

Assaulted on the Street in Albany by a Man Who Wants a Pardon for His Brother-in-Law.

ALBANY, N. Y., October 21.—On his way to the Executive mansion yesterday morning Governor Cleveland was assaulted by Samuel T. Boom, of Elmira, N. Y., who, with his wife, created an excitement some days since in the Executive chamber. Boom lay in wait for the Governor at the corner of Lancaster and Eagle streets, and as he approached addressed him, following up at once with two blows, which were warded off by the Governor. Boom then rushed into the street and reached for a paving stone. As he was picking it up he was seized by a passer-by and held, the Governor quietly passing on.

A large crowd at once collected and in the confusion Boom escaped and entered his boarding house near the scene of the assault where he was followed and arrested. He was taken before Police Justice Gutman who remanded him for examination on Wednesday at three p. m. The Governor was visited by scores of people during the morning. He makes light of the affair. Boom, who is a small delicate man, looks wild but talks rationally. He admits the assault was unjustified, but insists that his wife is dying in Albany and that her illness was greatly aggravated by her fretting about a pardon which she sought from the Governor for her brother some days since. Boom says he has had no sleep for upwards of a week in consequence of her illness, and the attending physician yesterday morning assured him that his wife would not recover. The poor fellow may be temporarily insane, or at least, classed as a "crank."

Boom was at Auburn on September 30. He made no secret of his mission which was to see his brother-in-law, but talked freely of it. Among other things, he said that he had been promised a pardon and that either Cleveland or Stansfield, the District Attorney of Chemung County, had lied to him and that if it was Cleveland he would shoot him.

Death of an Old Slave Aged 110 Years.

FISHKILL, N. Y., October 20.—Prince Crosby, who was the slave and servant of Enock Crosby, who figured as Harvey Birch in Cooper's story of "The Spy," died a few days ago at his residence near Carthage Landing in this town. Some two or three years ago he considered himself to be 104 years old, but some believe that he was 110 at the time of his death.

A Boy Who is Charged With Theft Suicides.

EAST SAGINAW, Mich., October 21.—Saturday the fifteen-year-old son of Henry Bernhart, a tailor, of Saginaw City, was arrested for disposing of a gold watch stolen from Joseph Barber three weeks ago. The matter was amicably settled and Bernhardt was released. Yesterday morning at three o'clock he committed suicide by jumping into the Saginaw River.

Fast Ocean Time.

NEW YORK, October 21.—The Guion steamer Alaska arrived Sunday from Liverpool, via Queenstown, having made a very fast passage notwithstanding two day's delay by weather. The trip was completed in six day, twenty-two hours and thirty-two minutes, which is within fifty-two minutes of her best western voyage.

Clergymens' Effects Exempt From Taxation.

Neither Blaine nor Cleveland.

NEW YORK, October 21.—Felix Adler, the well-known Hebrew orator and preacher, advised his hearers to refrain, on grounds of public morality, from voting for either Blaine or Cleveland.

THE PACIFIC COAST.

A Serious Failure at San Francisco—Items of News from Oregon.

SAN FRANCISCO, October 21.—The failure of A. W. Bowman, capitalist and real estate broker, which was announced last Thursday, will prove to be much more serious than was at first supposed. It is now pretty well established that the misappropriated moneys placed in his hands for investment will reach half a million dollars. One of the heaviest loosers will, it is said, be Mrs. Harry Bowie, at present in Europe. She was immensely wealthy in her own right and Bowman had absolute charge of her affairs. He was a heavy borrower from the Bank of California, but it is believed the bank is fully secured. It is difficult to get at the facts, as the interested parties refuse to say anything until the assignee has made his settlement. Bowman, who is ill in bed, has been placed under arrest.

PORTLAND, Ore., October 21.—J. J. Hedges, a young attorney of this city, who was convicted a few days ago of forgery, was sentenced to the penitentiary for five years.

The stage was stopped Saturday near Weiser, Idaho, by three masked men under the cover of their rifles. The driver threw out the express treasure box, and he was then ordered to drive on. Several passengers were in the stage, but no attempt was made to rob them. It is not known how much the robbers got. A party of citizens was immediately organized and are in pursuit.

The body of an unknown man was found Saturday near Harrington, W. T., in the midst of dense timber. A few yards distant the body of his horse was found dead. Both bodies were fearfully torn and mangled. There is no clue to the identity of the man. The only solution of the tragedy is that both were attacked by coughars and killed. Tracks of these ferocious animals were found in the immediate vicinity. The whole country is infested with them.

RESERVOIR DAM BREAKS.

The Reservoir on Beaver Brook, Ansonia, Conn., Gives Way—The Inhabitants Escape to High Ground for Safety—No Lives Lost.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., October 21.—Last night about half-past eight o'clock the inhabitants residing in the tenements of the lower part of the village of Ansonia were placed in great fright as they realized that the scenes of a year ago, when the reservoir dam on Beaver Brook burst, were to be re-enacted. The dam supplying the Ansonia Brass & Copper Company has for the past fortnight or three weeks been undergoing repairs and a new flume and sluice way built. To do this it was necessary to build a cofferdam. Suddenly and without warning, last night the latter burst in the center, and about twenty feet of it was washed away. The large reservoir, containing nearly two hundred acres of water, gave way and rushed with fearful velocity down the channel. The alarm spread, and the families occupying the tenements, to the number of nearly one hundred, escaped to higher ground, leaving their dwellings to the mercy of the rushing torrent. No lives were lost so far as known.

A large force of men united in efforts to keep back the water, but without avail, and the water in the reservoir was allowed to run out. The damage is variously estimated at from $7,000 to $10,000, upon which there is no insurance. The large mills of the place were uninjured, the loss falling mainly upon poor workingmen.

The Harrison Wire Works at St. Louis Applies for a Receiver.

ST. LOUIS, October 21.—The announcement that an application for a receiver for the Harrison Wire works had been filed caused a great deal of sympathy for the gentlemen connected with it, Messrs. Fitch, Harrison and Lute. The company had been embarrassed for some time. Fitch, President of the company, is Lieutenant Fitch, the man who married Miss Minnie, a daughter of General Sherman. He loses nearly all his wealth. The rumor that General Sherman backed him is denied. It is not long since that Harrison was worth a million and a half in excess of liabilities. By assigning about the time the St. Louis Ore & Steel Company had a receiver appointed, he could have saved a large amount of his property, but at the urgent solicitation of a number of St. Louis gentlemen, who represented to him the bad effect the assignment would have on the financial situation, he concluded to try to carry his burdens through. It is said that the very men who were anxious that Harrison should sacrifice himself for the public good declined to render any assistance, when he in turn needed it, or he would still be a wealthy man. As it is, he prevented a panic in St. Louis at his own expense. Those who know the condition of the Harrison properties believe that but little will be saved from the wreck.

Gone to Work at a Reduction.

EASTON, Pa., October 21—The machine runners at the Iowa Barb Wire Works, in South Easton, this morning began work at reduced wages. The runners of the three and one-half inch machines were reduced ten cents on one hundred pounds, but to help them make up the reduction each man is given two machines instead of one. In this way they will work twice as hard, and earn about the same wages. The runners of the seven inch machines were reduced from fifteen to twelve and one-half cents for one hundred pounds, or about thirty-five cents a day.

$1,000,000 to be Refunded to Canadian Hay Exporters.

MONTREAL, October 21.—The United States Secretary of State has advised the hay exporters of this Province that the customs duties charged them some years ago are pronounced illegal by the Supreme Court and will be refunded. Claims for over $1,000,000 are filed and many more will follow. A vast number of claims were bought up here for a song by brokers, who will now reap a rich harvest in return for their nominal outlay.

Wall Street Bank Pays Another Dividend.

NEW YORK, October 21.—The receiver of the Wall Street Bank began the payment of a dividend of twenty per cent. to the depositors yesterday, the amount to be paid under this dividend is about $200,000. This makes eighty per cent. which the depositors have received of their accounts, and Ex President Evans says that they will probably be paid in full. It is doubtful, however, whether the stockholders will receive anything.

Miners Strike for an Advance.

COLUMBUS, O., October 21.—The remainded of the miners in the Ohio Central and the Buckeye Creek regions have struck for eighty cents per ton as the mining rate, and will not resume work to-day. This will cut off heavy contributions to their fellow strikers of the Hocking region.

Very Remarkable Recovery.

Mr. Gen. V. Willing, of Manchester, Mich., writes: "My wife has been almost helpless for five years, so helpless that she could not turn over in bed alone. She used two Bottles of Electric Bitters, and is so much improved, that she is able now to do her own work." Electric Bitters will do all that is claimed for them. Hundreds of testimonials attest their great curative powers. Only fifty cents a bottle at C. A. Wright & Co.

D. A. Starkweather, foreman of the Slaight mill, two miles north of Stanton, was killed by the mill machinery. He leaves a wife and two children.

C. A. Wright & Co., will refund the price paid if Acker's Blood Elixir does not relieve any skin or blood disorder. A new, but thoroughly tested discovery.

George Phillips, of Leoni, fooled with a gun and now has less fingers than he had before.

C. A. Wright & Co. state that indigestion prepares every one for disease, but guarantee Acker's Dyspepsia Tablets to cure all forms of indigestion.

Why is it that so many neglect coughs and colds until they get consumption? Why is it so many die with consumption? It is because they will not come and be healed. Every one knows a sure conqueror of throat and lung diseases is Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, and that it can be got of any druggist.

No disease will trouble you if you keep your blood pure, your kidneys strong, your bowels regular and your mind clear by occasional use of that great reviver and supporter of health and strength known as Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla. Its praise should be in every mouth! Its merit should be known by all!

A mass of copper a rod square and one foot thick awaits hoisting to the surface at the National mine.

If you feel yourself growing weaker, your strength failing, the functions of your body becoming impaired, take warning in time! Your blood is starving for want of nourishment. Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla is food for the blood. It purifies this stream of life and strengthens every part of the body, rebuilds a broken down constitution, produces dreamless slumber, and restores wasted energies and a shattered nervous system. A trial bottle will convince. No other remedy equals it.

BLAINE IS BEATEN.

The Philadelphia Times, an Independent Republican paper, the most influential newspaper in the Keystone state, thus interprets the October election:

We believe that Blaine is beaten. The popular tide as developed in the important October elections, is an unerring index of an adverse current against Blaine, and an adverse Blaine tide in the middle of October, means a Blaine Waterloo in November.

The Ohio Blaine victory is the victory of death. It makes plain the fact that on the largest vote ever polled, with the most lavish expenditure of money known in any state, with Federal officials called from their public duties to work for the party in nearly every precinct, with Blaine leading the battle in exhaustive personal effort for a fortnight, and with the prohibition vote going nearly solid for the Blaine ticket, the thoroughly Republican State of Ohio falls short fully one-half below the voluntary majority of October, 1880, and two-thirds below the Garfield majority.

It is an unerring index that Ohio, with her overwhelming majority for an acceptable Presidential candidate, must be fought over again in November to insure her electoral vote for Blaine. It assures Indiana for Cleveland without a desperate struggle, and it is notice that Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin must be contested as at least remotely doubtful states. It is notice to the leaders of the Plumed Knight that his battle henceforth is against fearful gale and tide; that just when he and his resources are exhausted, the Cleveland leaders come into the field with fresh resources and growing popular sentiment in their favor. We believe, therefore, that Blaine is beaten.

West Virginia was regarded by Blaine as a hopeful State when he entered upon his campaign of desperation in Ohio. The Republican-Greenback fusion has been perfected there under the immediate inspiration of Blaine and the immediate lead of Elkins. The battle was opened with the regular Blaine flourish of trumpets and the regulation extravagant claims of organs. The narrow Democratic margin of from 2,000 to 3,000 against the combined Republican-Greenback vote, was regarded as within the reach of lavish expenditure and a humming campaign. Blaine opened the canvass in person for several days, and nothing was left undone or unpromised or unclaimed, to break the picket State of the South. But West Virginia has largely increased her Democratic vote; largely increased her Democratic majority; swept every Congressional district from the Blaine coalition and almost rivals Ohio's reduced Republican majority with her increased Democratic majority. A solid South and a broken North now confront the Republicans, and we believe that Blaine is beaten.

We believe that Blaine is beaten for one reason, and for that reason he justly deserves to be beaten. He has been heard in Maine, in New York, in Pennsylvania, in nearly every chief center of Ohio, in West Virginia and in Michigan, and he has yet to utter the first word in favor of honest government, of reduced taxation, of repealing the hundred millions of surplus and of restoring the national authority to public integrity and economy. He has not uttered one word that could offend the jobbers of the land; not one word to chill the hopes of banded plunderers; not one word to give assurance that Star Route thieves shall cease to mock justice under the shadows of the Capitol; not one word to recall the nation to an honest ballot and to honest administration. Ohio totters under the hunger for such nourishment from the Republican candidate: West Virginia, with her frugal sons of the mines, the field and the forest, demands reduced taxes and frugal government, and North and South promise to make common cause to restore the national authority to the integrity of Abraham Lincoln. We believe that Blaine is beaten.

The B. & O. Red Book for Michigan is ready for distribution, and in more than one respect, is the most valuable of any of the editions hitherto based upon this State. As has always been the rule, the forwarding of a stamp to C. K. Lord, Baltimore, is all that is necessary to secure a copy, and in fact the only way, as the Red Book issues are all for mail circulation. The present volume is replete with political statistics and condensed data, not only as regards the latest Presidential, State and Congressional elections in this State, but relating as well to elections since admission into the Union. It would be difficult to imagine a more complete showing of past results in the State, or a more neatly put together and printed little book.

The Democrats of Holloway will raise a Cleveland & Hendricks pole on Friday afternoon. Lieut. L. H. Salsbury and C. H. Dewey will address the people on the political topics of the day.

HON. E. P. ALLEN REVIEWED.

As our readers are aware, our republican friends have had another meeting and their candidate for Congress in the 3d Dist. has been making a speech. In that speech he made some assertions which need to be examined a little.

In his speech Mr. Allen made the broad assertion that slavery was not abolished through the instrumentality of any party. The abolition party did not play any part in it, for it was disbanded and had disappeared several years before. The republican party did not effect it; they only advocated the restriction, not the abolition of slavery. President Lincoln did not do it; he only gave liberty to the slaves within the bounds of the Confederacy at the time he issued his proclamation. In making such assertions Mr. Allen robs the republican party of its chief glory and the thunder which has overthrown its enemies for twenty years past. If a democrat had made such a declaration, it would have been denounced as a campaign lie, and justly so too. What shall we say of it when it comes from a simon pure republican?

It is not probable that Mr. Allen would have made such an assertion had he not had a very difficult case in court which required "special pleading." He was laboring to convince his jury that a prohibition party is useless and cannot accomplish anything. So he said that the abolition of slavery was brought about not by a party but by the people, by an amendment to the Constitution. Yes, but who formulated that amendment and proposed it to the States? Did not a republican congress do it over the protest of the democrats? And who passed it in the requisite number of States? Did not the republican party do it in every case? And who supported President Lincoln in going as far as the Constitution would permit him in freeing the slaves? Did not the republican party? Suppose there had been no republican party? And suppose that there had never been any anti-slavery organization to educate the people, would the people ever have risen to the height of striking off the fetters of the African slave? In face of such inquiries the assertions of Mr. Allen must pass for the veriest trickery and nonsense.

Again Mr. Allen claims that the republican party is not a whiskey party in practice. He says that it has done all the temperance legislating in this State. Let us see. Very true they enacted the only prohibitory law Michigan has ever had. But before that law was old enough to show what it could do, the same party repealed the search and seizure clause; A little later they repealed the wine and beer clause. Were these changes made in the interest of prohibition? Who dares assert it? Of course they did amend it many times for the better. But in 1875, after the famous Beer Brewer's Congress had resolved that it was a failure they repealed it. But Mr. Allen says the Democrats did it. That is he says, that year the Democrats came very near carrying the legislature, and the solid democratic vote with a small minority of republicans repealed it. But how could that be? The republicans had a small majority. The Governor was a republican. He must have signed that law, or the democrats, with a small minority of republicans would not have passed it over his head.

But Mr. Allen says that every vote for the prohibition party is a vote for the democrats. He says that there are only two parties and that we must vote for one or the other of the two. He seems to say it is decreed by fate that one or the other of these must rule in the future and we cannot help supporting one of the two, vote as we may. Therefore he says, we must choose between the republican and democratic parties. We would ask who has seen the decree that these two corrupt parties are not to be broken up. In the name of a free ballot we protest against any such assertion. It is an attempt to bull-doze conscientious voters, and whip them back into the party traces. When a republican votes prohibition he votes for principles. In no sense does he support the democratic party. What if he should help the democrats for the time? It is only that they may in turn be hurled from power into the oblivion which they have so long deserved.

Several prominent members of the g. o. p. have asked Mr. St. John to withdraw. The apostolic candidate answers in effect that unlike Mr. Neal Dow he is a Prohibitionist on Presidential election years as well as on "off" years; that he is not a Republican with prohibitory annex, an umbrella for fair weather only; a summer hotel that closes as fall comes on; or any other temporary make-shift affair. He thinks the Prohibition party has come to stay. At any rate he has.—Exchang.

PROHIBITION.

We have two systems of education in this country. One hundred and sixty-four thousand public schools educating for God, and one hundred and seventy-five thousand saloons educating for the Devil. For education of our children through public schools, to an honest, sober, Christian manhood and womanhood, we pay annually about $80,000,000. For education through the saloon, the hot-bed of misery, poverty, crime and shame, we contribute about $1,400,000,000 per annum. In other words, for every dollar that we expend to build up through our public schools, we invest $17 to tear down through the saloons.

And yet, in the face of these facts, the saloon system, as well as the public schools, receive the sanction and protection of the laws of the land, and each of the great political parties of to-day, while approving of the schools are too cowardly to oppose the saloons. Such political truckling ought to be condemned by the ballot of every lover of "God, and home and native land." What are we going to do about it? Why, one distinguished politician from the East, without a word against the evil, proposes to divide the revenue received from the liquor traffic among the several states, thus giving it a chance to buy its way into public favor. The idea! Sanction a business that destroys soul and body and robs the people of $1,400,000,000 annually, that the Government may get $70,000,000 revenue from it? What statesmanship? Another equally great politician from the prairies of the West suggests that the liquor revenue be devoted to the education of the youth of the land. In other words, make a public school director out of the Devil, and then expect God to bless such a plan.

But many persons, even some who claim to be Christians, are willing that these soul destroying aliens shall exist as long as they pay for the privilege. In other words, they are for saloons "for revenue only," apparently ignoring the fact that money can never make the great wrong right.

If I possessed the power, I would forever prohibit the importation manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, including wine, ale and beer, as a beverage. But we are told that that would "take away our liberties." Would it? What legitimate liberty, I ask, would it deprive us of?

Just think of it. Four saloons to every church, six bartenders to every preacher, thirty dollars expended for intoxicating liquors for every dollar paid for Christian missions, homes destroyed, manhood gone, graves and prisons filled with the victims of the infamous traffic; then talk to me about the liberty of the citizen finding a lodgment in such a system.

But I am glad that prohibition of the liquor traffic is no longer confined to the narrow limits of only a few of the states. It is to-day a great national question. Our wasted resources, debauched manhood, destroyed homes, and aching hearth cry aloud against this giant evil, the crime of crimes. And woe be unto the political party or individual that shall stand in the way of an indignant and outraged people, as they burst asunder the political shackles that have bound them, and, with a view solely to the good of the whole country, looking to God for his guidance, strike for a purer government, happier homes, and a higher civilization. Our country's flag should know no North, no South, no East, no West; but its protecting folds should cover alike the palatial mansion of the rich, the rude "dug-out" of the pioneer on the plains of the West, or the humble cabin of the black man in the South. It should be the emblem of sobriety and morality, of free schools, a free ballot and free homes, and the highest rights of citizenship for every well disposed human being of proper age from whom we demand allegiance to our Government and obedience to the laws. It should boldly uphold and defend the right, and condemn the wrong, and thus become what its founders intended it should be, the symbol of the highest civilization attainable by man—freedom under Christ.—JOHN P. ST. JOHN.

Temperance vs. Prohibition.

We hope that all who really desire prohibition will note the distinction Republican organs are making between temperance and prohibition. They call themselves the temperance party in contradistinction to the prohibitionists. What does that mean? Why saloons just as we now have. Nothing more, and that is what the Republican party is determined to adhere to as its policy. It has only taken up prohibition when it had to do it or be wrecked on the rocks of popular indignation. Prohibitionists you might as well understand that when you vote with the old party you vote to continue the reign of legalized dram shops,—legalized robbery and murder. You vote to make the State a partner in the iniquitous business of ruining men's bodies and damning their souls. Can you do this with a good conscience? Stop and think.

The statement may as well be emphasized here and now that James G. Blaine will not receive more than one electoral vote from Michigan, and if the St. John boom keeps up he will not receive even one.—Exchange.

Adrian Record: The Petersburg Journal, which absorbed the circulation of the late Deerfield Record when the founder of the latter escaped to Milan, has decided to print the news from Deerfield as correspondence instead of making a separate publication, as the entire edition, being printed outside the county, is subject to postage. The post-office department snaps onto the editor's pocket book like a mud turtle on a small boy.

Yesterday afternoon at Springville, Mr. Hannibal Osborn, of Franklin and Miss Rachel S. Mosher were joined in marriage by Rev. Geo. W. Hudson of this village. Both parties have lived many years in their respective townships and are universally esteemed. Every one will say at once, upon hearing the news—"a most appropriate match." The bride will have a fine home and she will preside over it with dignity. Hand shaking and congratulations are in order, in which the HERALD heartily and sincerely joins.

Union street is rapidly becoming the "fifth avenue" of Tecumseh. The best residences recently built have been upon that street, and the finest one of all has just been completed by A. W. Mills. The building is an imposing brick structure, with a commodious basement, two full stories and a roomy attic. The main edifice contains a large vestibule, parlor, family room and nursery, and the rear addition contains kitchen, dining-room, bath-room, pantry, and other conveniences. The rooms are large, very high between floor and ceiling and splendidly lighted. The house will be lighted by gas and heated by steam, all the appointments are first-class, and the workmanship of the best order. Theo. Crane was the Superintendent of the carpenter work. Shaw, Kendall & Co., of Toledo, furnished the steam heating apparatus and the plumbing. The Combination Gas Machine Works of Detroit furnished the gas machine. The slate roof was from the firm of Draper & Hass of Toledo. The lumber was furnished by Wolcott, Temple & Co. Mr. Mill's family have just moved in and they are now putting down carpets and getting settled. Taking into consideration location, size, finish and interior conveniences, Mr. Mills has the model family residence of Tecumseh. May he live long to enjoy it. He deserves it.

Another elegant dwelling house has just been completed on Union street by J. H. Smith, the popular manager of the Tecumseh Lumber Co. It is located on the corner of Union and Logan streets, opposite E. B. Wood's residence. The house is two full stories with a fine cellar below. It has a large vestibule, parlor, family room, nursery, dining room and kitchen below and three large sleeping rooms on the second floor. The outside appearance of the house is very attractive and the interior finish is equal to that of any house in Tecumseh. The casings and inside blinds are pine, and the doors of butternut, all finished in hard oil. Chas. Smith had charge of the carpenter work. Mr. Smith has just taken possession of his new home and is getting "settled" as fast as possible.

Paul Bowen, formerly of Raisin, who is now a clerk in the Treasury Department, at Washington, is at home on a furlough, and will remain in this county until after election. We never saw him looking better. He says politics are red hot now in Washington, but the clerks are obliged to go home if they would exercise the right of suffrage. So Mr. Bowen will stay until after Nov. 4th.

He also informs us that he has leased 15 lots fronting the lake, to Grass Lake parties who will build cottages there next Summer.

Adrian Record: Deputy Sheriff John Smith has been freely setting up the cigars for the past day or two on the strength of a report that he had just been married. Smyth protested his innocence in the most solemn and impressive manner, but it "didn't go." His acquaintances wouldn't have it that way, and so he continued on helplessly treating his friends, till the publication of the marriage of John T. Smith—a Smith who does not spell his name with a "y." The newspapers let the official out, and those who were "boning" him for treats have now gone for the other Smith. It is a serious thing to be named Smith or even Smyth.

She is a noble woman and has always been a favorite among her relatives and acquaintances. The array of beautiful bridal gifts attested the esteem in which she is held by those who know her. The wedding was not large, but was a most genial gathering, and the company were superbly entertained. The prayers and best wishes of family and friends will accompany this couple as they set sail upon life's voyage.

Prof. Hammond is the happy father of an eight pound boy, who happened around last Saturday morning. Although the Professor's tutorial duties are mostly confined to the high school department it would not be surprising if he gave some attention to the infantry department hereafter. We are happy to learn that the mother is prospering and that the youngster has good lungs.

Adrian Times: The Michigan Overland telephone company, the formation of which we noted the other day, will make an effort to establish an exchange here, and will be represented here by ex-Ald. Secord. The company proposes to charge at the rate of $25 a year for private houses, $36 a year for business places, and desires to place $5,000 of its stock here at a very low price. It will make no extra charge for telephoning in the county, and expects soon to have lines in operation. It claims for its system many superiorities over the Bell telephone, but at present has no line in operation.

John VanVleet is just putting the finishing touches upon a splendid new family residence on his farm between Tecumseh and Ridgeway. The new house is a few rods east of the old one. It is a large square upright, with a wing on the west side, both two stories. There is a cellar beneath the whole house, which is plastered overhead. The rooms are large and pleasant and the interior arrangement is fitted up with a view to convenience as well as comfort. The exterior is painted a handsome drab. The masons finished their work last Friday. The painters have inside work to do which will soon be completed and Mr. VanVleet will take formal possession before the snow flies.

Last Thursday evening the Republicans had a rally at the Opera House which was the most successful meeting of the campaign thus far. The Manchester band came down on the afternoon train to furnish music. About seven o'clock the band proceeded to the home of H. W. Stevens and serenaded Capt. Allen who was stopping there and escorted the speakers up town, and by eight o'clock the opera house was filled with a good crowd. Capt. Allen was the first speaker and the major portion of his speech was an effort to whip the Prohibitionists into the traces. John K. Boies of Hudson followed with a good sound candid speech. It is no flattery to Mr. Boies and only the plain truth to state that his speech was by far the better one of the two. We do not care to criticise either of the speeches. From a Republican standpoint the meeting was certainly a success.

"Our house here is very pleasant. It belongs to a professor who taught in the college here till he was requested to resign, and consequently he was obliged to seek fresh fields and pastures new, so we got his house. There is a large grape vine in the yard and a fig tree with lots of figs on it, so you see, we can according to scripture, sit under our own vine and fig tree. There is also a large English walnut tree with lots of walnuts on it and the children have big times knocking down the nuts which are now ripe. There are three large canneries here giving employment to at least a thousand people, mostly girls, who prepare the fruit for canning. My friend, Mr. Brock Anderson, a Tecumseh boy who came here nearly twenty years ago, is head clerk in the largest cannery here, and he showed me through their establishment last week, and I tell you it was a sight worth seeing. They were canning lots of strawberries which are raised here all the year round. Also such sights of plums, pears, peaches and apricots, I never saw in my life. Some of these they can, and some are dried. In their drying rooms there were bins with hundreds of bushels of dried fruit in them, and beautiful fruit too, as no imperfect fruit is bought by them."

The Library Association, at a recent meeting appointed a committee to take into consideration the feasibility of getting up a lecture course here during the coming winter, with full power to take such action as they deemed proper. The committee have corresponded with several parties and lecture bureaus and find that a good course of five or six lectures will be quite expensive, and as the object of the course is to replenish the treasury of the association, the committee were somewhat in doubt as to their action. They finally hit upon this plan—to get pledges from twenty or more citizens agreeing to make up any deficiency should there be one. Mr. Mills circulated a subscription paper of this kind and in two days obtained seventy signatures. This makes the course a fixed fact. If it proves a financial failure, the signers of the paper bear the loss proportionately. If a success, the Library association will get the benefit of it. Lecturers will be engaged at once. The course will consist of five or six entertainments, a portion of which will be musical in character.

TECUMSEH LUMBER COMPANY.

A BRIEF REVIEW OF ONE OF TECUMSEH'S BEST MANUFACTURING INDUSTRIES.

Lumber and Building Materials of all Kinds at Wholesale and Retail—Where to Get New Houses and Stores.

The Tecumseh Lumber Co., as at present organized is one of the strongest, best managed and most successful enterprises of Tecumseh. The business was organized on a small scale in 1883, by S. W. Temple, who conducted it for several years. During his ownership a large lumber yard was established on Shawnee street, and a planing mill was erected on the corner of Shawnee and Pearl streets. On the 26th of Oct. 1882, the "Tecumseh Lumber Co." was organized, which bought from Mr. Temple all his stock on hand and leased his lumber yard and planing mill. On the 26th day of June last, the planing mill was destroyed by fire. The loss was nearly $16,000, on which there was $9,000 insurance, which was promptly paid. The company were then in a quandary whether to rebuild on the old lot or purchase elsewhere; but finally struck a bargain with S. W. Temple to lease his new brick planing mill in the rear of and adjoining their lumber yard. On the 1st. of July, 1884, the week after the fire, the company was reorganized with N. B. Bradley & Sons of Bay City, and H. C. Wason & Co., of Toledo, as proprietors, and on the 10th of July this new firm leased Temple's new brick planing mill and took immediate possession.

Their yard, located on Shawnee street near the L. S. & M. S. depot, is about twelve rods square. A fine brick office building is situated at the corner of Shawnee and Railroad streets. A store room and shed fifteen feet wide extend the entire length of the yard on the West side, and there is another large store house for blinds, doors, etc. on Shawnee street. The planing mill leased from Temple is a few rods North and West of the lumber yard, a side track running past the building. It is a substantial brick structure, with large engine room on the north side. A large addition has just been erected on the North side which nearly doubles the capacity of the mill. The building is most solidly built two stories with metal roof, is equipped with one of the finest boiler and engines in Southern Michigan, and a large assortment of the best machines made. It containes one large 26 ft. planer, one Fay moulding and matching machine, one tenoner, one sash machine, one door machine, three blind machines, one scroll-sawing machine, one shaping machine, three sawing machines, one mortising machine and one sand papering machine. A new exhaust fan is attached to all the machines. The firm is now negotiating for a large dry kiln which will be put in very soon.

Mr. N. B. Bradley, the controlling partner of this firm, is doing an immense lumber business at Bay City and proposes to keep the Tecumseh Yard supplied with a large and varied assortment of lumber. All kinds of finished work are kept on hand such as doors, blinds, mouldings, sash, casings, etc. Builders hardware and paints are also kept in stock. Anything wanted—except brick and mortar—to build a new house, can be bought at this establishment, in small or large quantities. The firm keep about twenty men in constant employment, and some weeks have an additional force to keep up with their orders. They are receiving several car loads of lumber, calculating to put up a large stock of finished work during the winter for the spring trade. They have furnished the material for a large number of stores and dwelling houses this season, both in Tecumseh and outside towns.

They are making the windows for the new Court House at Adrian. They have furnished lumber and finished work for Usborne's new store, Montague's new store, and Lee's new Hotel in Tecumseh; two new stores at Manchester; nine new buildings at Onsted, and several new farm dwellings in this vicinity. P. W. Adams bought three car loads of stuff this summer, to build a new house and barn, which were shipped to Delaware where he now resides. Several car loads of factory work have been exported to different points in Ohio and Kentucky this season.

The company when first organized, engaged E. E. Koch as manager. Mr. J. H. Smith entered their employment Sept. 17, 1883, and upon the reorganization after the fire in July last, Mr. Smith became the business manager of the new concern. No better man could have been found for that position. He is a practical carpenter and builder, and thus knows all the details of housebuilding, has built many new houses on contract and is thus posted in business management, is young, energetic, and attentive to business. Under his keen eye and careful management the entire establishment moves along like clock work. Mr. Bradley paid Tecumseh a visit a few days ago and expressed himself as more than satisfied with the manner in which the business is conducted. The company have the money and stock as a foundation, they have fine buildings and machines, they have first class workmen and good business management, and with these they purpose building up the strongest business in their line, in Southern Michigan.

Frank Leslie's Sen ay Magazine

For November will prove of equal interest to the young and the old, the reader for amusement only, and the thinker—in fact, to all classes; for in it may be found something to interest all. The opening is a careful study, By the Rev. Geo. T. Rider, of the University system of education as illustrated in the English Universities of Oxford and Cambridge. An Article on "Hymns and Hymn Tunes," by D. E. Harvey, is both historical and critical. Dr. Talmage has a trenchant expose of the imposture of Spiritualism, and in The House Pulpit he preaches on the Christianized Vote. The Carter Family, Joseph Barnby, and John Francis Barnett, are treated in the Sacred Musicians series. A charming Southern story, entitled "Sophy," is contributed by Mrs. Adelade C. Waldron: and there is a notable article, "Troubadours and Trouveres" with a portrait of Frederick Mistral. The Rev. Geo. W. Nichols contributes a twelfth letter to The Collection Basket, this time treating of the remarkable changes in New York since his boyhood. The number is profusely and handsomely illustrated as usual. Price 25 cents a number, $2.50 per year. Mrs. FRANK LESLIE, Publisher, 53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

The November number of the Magazine of Art closes the volume for the year with unusual attractions. The frontispiece of the number is from Mr. F. A. Bridgeman's last salon picture, "The Bath at home, Cairo," and is very suggestive of that artist's gorgeous oriental coloring. This picture accompanies an article on "The American Salon," by Mr. W. C. Brownell, who was until he left this country for Europe, the art critic of the New York World. Mr. Brownell is an admirable critic and he has a fruitful subject. Each one of these papers is illustrated with numerous engravings, some of them from nature, others from rare prints and notable paintings. A complete record of the art news of the month, both in Europe and America will be found in its usual place in the Magazine.—Cassell & Company, Limited, New York.

The Duke of Wellington's Experiment.

In a ground-floor room in one of the large public buildings of London a man sat writing at a table covered with papers. He was a short, strongly built figure, with a prominent nose, and a face hard and massive as a granite statue, wearing the set look peculiar to men who have surmounted great difficulties and confronted great perils. Few, indeed, had had more practice in both than this man, for he was no other than the Duke of Wellington, and his crowning victory at Waterloo was still but a few years old.

There was the tinkle of a bell outside, and then a murmur of voices in the anteroom, but the Duke never raised his head from his writing, even when his secretary entered and said:

"If it please your Grace, that man with the bullet-proof breastplate has called again, and wishes very much to see your Grace for a moment."

The Duke's face darkened, as well it might, for the man in question was the most pertinacious bore whom he had ever encountered. The bullet-proof cuirass was his own invention, and he never lost a chance of declaring that the safety of the whole British army depended upon the instant adoption of this "unparalleled discovery," which he carried about with him, and exhibited at all times and in all places.

Had this been all, he would soon have been disposed of; but, unluckily, he had contrived to interest in his invention one or two of the Duke's personal friends, and to get from them letters of recommendation which even Wellington could not easily disregard. Something must clearly be done, however; for although the fellow had hitherto been kept at bay, he was evidently determined to give the Duke no peace till the matter had been fully gone into.

For a moment Wellington looked so grim that the secretary began to hope for the order which he would gladly have obeyed, viz., to kick the inventor into the street forthwith. But the next instant the iron face cleared again, and over it played the very ghost of a smile, like a gleam of winter sunshine upon a precipice.

"Show him in," said he, briefly.

The observant secretary noted both the tone and the smile that accompanied it; and he inwardly decided that it would have been better for the inventor if he had not insisted on seeing the duke.

In came the great discoverer—a tall, slouched, shabby, slightly red-nosed man, with a would-be jaunty air, which gave way a little, however, before the "Iron Duke's" penetrating glance.

"I am glad to think that your Grace appreciates the merits of my invention," said he, in a patronizing tone. "They are, indeed, too important to be undervalued by any great commander. Your Grace cannot fail to remember the havoc made by your gallant troops at Waterloo among the French cuirassiers, whose breastplates were not bullet-proof; whereas, if—"

"Have you got the thing with you?" interrupted Wellington.

The inventor unwrapped a very showy looking cuirass of polished steel, and was just beginning a long lecture upon its merits, when the Duke cut him short by asking:

"Are you quite sure it is bullet-proof?"

"Quite sure, your Grace."

"Put it on, then, and go and stand in that corner."

The other wonderingly obeyed.

"Mr. Temple," shouted Wellington to his secretary, "tell the sentry outside to load with ball-cartridge, and come in here to test this cuirass. Quick, now!"

But quick though the secretary was, the inventor was quicker still. The moment he realized that he had been set up there on purpose to be fired at, and to be shot dead on the spot if his cuirass turned out to be not bullet-proof after all, he leaped headlong through the open window with a yell worthy of a Blackfoot Indian, and darting like a rocket across the court-yard, vanished through the outer gateway; nor did the Duke of Wellington, from that day forth, ever see or hear of him again.—David Ker, in Harper's Magazine.

Homesickness.

Reader, were you ever homesick? When you first left the parental roof and went out into the wide world to hew out a road to fortune and to fame, did you not feel that strange sense of unrest that made it seem impossible that you could live another hour away from home? Where one has not had this experience a hundred have. Well do I remember when, at fifteen years of age, I went out from father, mother, home and friends, and sought an education nearly five hundred miles away. The novelty of my new surroundings in the city, having passed all my life on a farm, sustained me for a month or more, and then, I felt the gnawing at my heart one evening, and for weeks and months it came and came again. I was standing in the front yard at my boarding place, when suddenly a lump arose in my throat and almost choked me. I was looking in the direction of my old home, and my gaze went over the houses along the river, and over the tree-tops on the bluff beyond, and wandered into space, where I saw in imagination, the old fire-side. Mother, dear old mother, was sitting there at her accustomed place, knitting away as if her life depended on "turning the heel" of that stocking. Father was reading the village paper, just as I had seen him do a hundred times. My brothers and sisters were all there as usual, and the cat dozed and purred before the fire of crackling branches, and the back-log of hissing-hot elm rolled from its place and scattered embers here and there, as I had seen it do over and over again. The shouts of the children, the terror of the cat, the hurry of mother to brush the glowing coals from the old rag carpet before they should add to the number of unsightly holes already burned in it, the activity of father in checking the progress of the back-log with his heavy boot, the overturning andirons, the choking smoke and all the accompanying excitement and effort to repair damages, were as I had seen them often; but I was not there to help and an unfathomable longing to go and participate in the dear old scenes came upon me.

What would I have given for the poor privilege of burning my fingers in a futile effort to set up the fallen fire-dogs? How I should have leaped and danced for joy even to have coughed from breathing the smoke! It would have been only second to Heaven to have had mother bind up my blistered fingers and little sister to put her chubby hands upon them and hurt them in her anxiety to find out whether I was shamming. But no: this picture was but a mirage, and I must wait. One day a letter came. It said another sister had been born to me. How very strange I felt. I had a sister I had never seen, and when I talked about it at the table the other boarders laughed at me and said I was homesick. I cried each night when I had gone to bed, and in the morning, my pillow was wet with tears, and at table, my room-mate told of how I had called for mother in my sleep, and so I was laughing-stock again. The lady of the house was kind to me, and, often when she found me weeping, had stroked my hair so like my mother had in years agone, I wept afresh. At last a day came when I was going home. The hours seemed ages, and the minutes to elapse before the train would come, were hours of torture. At last, good-by was said to my new friends, the bell was tapped and I was on the way. The speed was far too slow, and I almost felt that I could go faster if I were afoot. When at last the brakeman called the names of stations that I knew, my heart beat high with overrising hope, and I was in an ecstacy of joy. At last the whistle sounded and the brakeman called the station near my home. The train it seemed would never stop. The platform reached, I sprang off. What change had come upon the world? The buildings I had thought so high two years before were very low; the girls were in long dresses, and my little sweetheart was so tall and slender, shy and blushing, I could hardly speak to her. At home it was the same. Father and mother were more gray, the children larger, and I called the one I'd never seen by the name I'd called the next one older before I went away. The cat was sleepy and inactive, and the fire upon the hearth not half so bright. Alas! a change had come, and home was never home again.—Bloomington Thrown Mail.

The Stage Coach in New York City.

When the railroad car took the place of the slow stage-coach, it deprived travel of most of its pleasures. One sees but little of the country as he is whirled rapidly through it amid noise and dust. There is no way in which scenery can be so well enjoyed, as from an outside seat of a stage-coach. The moderate rate of speed allows all the beauties of the scene to be appreciated, and the changes of the road present an ever-varying panorama. Then the stage-coach allowed of social enjoyment, and chat and stories made the time pass pleasantly. What a contrast between the tavern, where the stage-passengers stopped for dinner, and the present railway station with its "five minutes for refreshments!" There is so much that is pleasant and enjoyable in travel by stage that wealthy gentlemen in New York City and vicinity not long ago formed a coaching club, each member of which had a "coach and four." There are now many members of the club. Each has a coach made in the best possible style. The body of each and the running gear is painted in a different style from the others. The horses are carefully selected, and have the most complete harness and trappings. The coaches have seats for six upon the roof, besides a place for the "guard," who with his horn announces the arrival of the coach. The driver is usually the owner of the coach, and there is no little friendly rivalry among the members over their skill in "handling the ribbons." A parade of the coaching club is something well worth seeing, and the club makes occasional excursions to more or less distant points. On one occasion its members, or a part of them, drove to Philadelphia and back, by the stage-route followed before the days of railroads. One member of the club is so enthusiastic a coachman that he runs a daily coach between one of the hotels of this city and a point in the suburbs. He takes passengers at a round price, and thus allows those who are not members of the club to enjoy the pleasures of this mode of traveling. So popular is the Tally-ho Coach that places are engaged many days ahead. The passenger by the coach leaves the city by that beautiful gateway, Central Park; and sees the city melt gradually into the country. His road takes him past beautiful villas as well as primitive farm houses. His senses are soon saluted by the refreshing sea air, and he arrives at his destination prepared to do justice to the ample dinner that awaits him. His destination is Pelham Bay, one of the most charming spots upon Long Island Sound. He here exchanges the varying scenes and sights of the road for one of tranquil beauty. The blue waters of the Sound stretch out in front of him, and the many sailing craft go lazily by, their quiet being in strange contrast to the fussy little steamer that occasionally passes. After a few hours of rest at Pelham Bay the homeward journey is commenced, and the passenger enjoys the same scene in the light of the declining sun, and reaches the starting point just as gas-lights and electric lamps are replacing the daylight, refreshed by the novel mode of travel and the change of air and scene. "But," some may say, "it is very expensive." So it is, but unlike many of the amusements of the wealthy, every dollar expended by the Coaching Club helps some one. The coach maker, the painter, the harness maker, and many other trades are benefited, and even the farmer, who breeds stage horses, has their value increased by what some regard as the extravagance of the Coaching Club.—American Agriculturist.

FAITH.

In matters of medicine it is said to be half a remedy; but in desperate; tantalizing, chronic diseases such as Rheumatism, it is hard to get up faith. That was the reason why Rev. A. C. Hume, of Indianapolis, preferred to test ATHLOPHOROS in about the severest case he could find before he pronounced upon its merits. He writes: "The case was of Rheumatism of twenty years' standing. The patient could not walk except with two canes or by pushing a chair before him. In a short time after taking Athlophoros he could walk without canes or the chair."

The following persons were injured: Samuel Carr, skull fractured, will die; Dave Hicks, badly scalded and leg broken, cannot recover; Ben. Moore, bruised about the head and shoulders; Thomas Taylor, nose broken, bruised about the head and shoulders; John Nash, brakeman, leg sprained; Mary Swallun, shoulders bruised; James McCoy, badly cut about the head; Conductor Charles Durham, slightly injured. I. R. SWAFFORD, a member of the State Senate of Tennessee, attacked Monroe Hudson, the jailor for White County, that State, on the streets of Sparta, a few days ago, when the latter shot him dead with a revolver. THREE burglars entered the store of Burch & Clark, of Menomonee, Wis., on the night of the 16th, and while rifling the show case attracted the attention of Walter Green, who occupied a room on the second floor. From there he went into Anderson County, S. C., where he found the other. He captured the thief in Pickens County, S. C., who proved to be one James Davis. Mr. Pelham had tracked the rascal twenty-five days, during which time his family knew nothing of his whereabouts. The thief had several times swapped horses on his route, and Mr. Pelham took the back-track for the purpose of returning the horses to their proper owners and recovered his mules without loss to others.

He claims that two other negroes are cognizant of the bargain with Mrs. Henry. SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

RIDGEWAY RACKET.

There will be quite a delegation go to Adrian the night of election to hear the returns.

Prof. H. C. Wilson was home over Sunday and is looking hearty.

The young winter last week, with an occasional snow squall on Thursday, made us think of the near approach of winter.

Some of our young folks went to Britton last Friday night to attend the oyster supper and dance given by the G. A. R. Post.

Miss Nellie Rappleye, of Dundee, is visiting her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Rappleye, this week.

Wm. Pilbeam has the frame up of his new house, south of the village.

The additions to J. F. Temple's and Wm. R. Wilson's houses are receiving the first coat of plaster this week.

Most time for election of officers of the Literary.

Martin Palmer commenced the winter term of school at Britton Monday last.

Fred Jones made his brother, Warren, a visit the first of the week.

It is hoped that some action will be taken by the official board of the church, at their next session, in regard to the noise in the hall during service Sunday evenings

Thomas Osborn drew 650 cabbages at one load to the depot Monday. He is loading a car with cabbage and apples to ship to Cincinnati.

Miss Brown, of Raisin, commenced the winter term of school at Pickerel Hill, Dist. No. 5. Monday.

Mrs. Nettie Sink, of Tecumseh, was the guest of Mrs. S. P. Smith Sunday.

The Ladies' church social will be held at the home of Mrs. John Arner Friday evening. A cordial invitation to all.

Mrs. Jesse Palmer and Mrs. William Parmelly, of Clinton county, are visiting friends here.

Quite a number went to Holloway on Friday afternoon to attend the Cleveland and Hendricks' rally and pole raising, and to hear Hon. C. H. Dewey and L. H. Salsbury talk on the tariff issue.

A good number went to Britton on Thursday night to hear Williard Stearns, editor of the Adrian Press, talk on the tariff issue from a Democratic view. The meeting was held in Exelby's new hall. The W. A. F. cornet band, of Dundee, furnished the music.

Clifton Geddes, of Adrian, and Misses Wolf, Dever and Wier, of Ohio, were the guests of Miss Belle Barlow Saturday afternoon.

Dave Allison and William Cornell moved back to our quiet village this week. No place like R., you know.

Judge Geddes, of Adrian, was on our streets Tuesday.

Dr. D. W. Loree having longed to see the smiling face of his better-half, who has been visiting her parents in Clinton county for the past few weeks took the 5 A. M. train Saturday for St. John in pursuit, and when the 4 P. M. train on the M. & O. arrived at our village Mrs. Loree came home expecting to surprise the Doctor. But, alas, he was gone and it was not until Monday night, when the Doctor came home, that the smiling faces met, declaring Sunday was so very long and dreary.

The young fellow who whipped his horse so shamefully on Sunday had better "look a little out" or certain persons will enter complaint and cause his arrest for cruelty.

Mrs. David Coryell received some very handsome presents from her Sabbath school class at the Christian church. They consisted of a basket filled with wax fruit and a vase of flowers under a glass cone. A Mr. Pugh also presented her with a whatnot and bible stand. On her birthday her relatives and friends made her a surprise and to show that they appreciated her kindness gave her a set of gold bound china dishes comprising seventy-five, pieces. Her brother, Elmer Hause, presented her with a beautiful bound volume entitled "Gems for the Fireside."

ONSTED ODDS.

There will be a matched game of base ball at Onsted Friday afternoon between Onsted and Rome Center clubs.

Onsted and Wemple are buying considerable wheat. They are also shipping apples to Chicago.

A number of workingmen are working on the new Grange Hall which is being built just north of the church.

The registration board of Cambridge township will meet at Springville next Saturday. Let every voter whose name is not already on the register attend to it.

The firm of Gibbs and Avery has been dissolved. Mr. Gibbs has purchased Mr. Avery's interest, and will conduct the business alone. We wish him success.

Wilson Lee has come here to superintend the finishing of his store. He has it enclosed and will soon have it ready for a stock of goods.

In looking over our little town we cannot help feeling proud of the rapid growth it has made in the past year. There is one thing more that is very much needed and that is a hotel. The right kind of a man would do well to come here and engage in that business.

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

Over fifty members of the Congregational Sunday School surprised Rev. E. W. Miller and wife with a visit last Saturday evening, at the same time presenting them with a handsome marble top centre table as a token of their regard.

Mr. Miller has lately received the appointment of State Sunday School Superintendent and Missionary—a position which he is in every way well qualified to fill and he will enter upon his new duties early in November. During the two years and a half of Mr. Miller's pastorate here he has won the respect and esteem of all our people. The church and Sunday School especially have reason to regret his departure as he has been untiring in his efforts to build up the society, and to bring the school to its present standard. May his successor prove as earnest and efficient in the good work.

Owing to the democratic meeting at the Town Hall on Thursday evening, the socable at Mrs. Jno. S. Clark's was not as largely attended as was expected. As was predicted Geo. was there and a good time was had.

The Prohibition meeting on Friday evening was very largely attended and the speaking by Fanning was very good and the Prohibitionists and Democrats were pleased alike as you could see by the animated countenances of both Prohibitionists and Democrats. Mr. Oh my. wern't the Republicans mad. How they did writhe when the speaker scored a point against them.

The death of Wm. T. Allen who lived just east of the village and who died very suddenly on last Sunday afternoon and while sitting in a chair, has caused a gloom to settle over the entire community. He was honored and respected by all. He leaves a wife and four sons to mourn his loss. An honest and upright man has died. His funeral took place at the home of the deceased on Tuesday afternoon and was largely attended by sympathising friends and neighbors. Rev. St. John of the Episcopal church officiating. Verily, when a good man dies the people mourn.

Candidates for office are just now more plenty than blackberries and each in turn seems to think that his election to some county office will be the means of saving the country. As some of them will undoubtedly be elected we conclude this county is safe.

HOLLOWAY HICKUPS.

Several of our townsmen attended the annual meeting of the Mutual Insurance Company, held at Adrian, on Monday, and W. J. Holdridge was re-elected as a director of the company. Now, people may say there is nothing in a name, but we know that the build of a man makes all the difference in the world. If not, then why is it that Butler and men of that build get all of the offices while us slim fellows have to work and earn an honest living. But never mind, the time is coming when some of these fat men will suffer terribly with heat, and then they will realize that they had their good things in this life.—Luke XVI. 22, 23, 24.

We noticed Dr. Nelson of Ridgeway in town on Tuesday, and the most remarkable thing of all was that he was in Dr. Begel's office, and they appeared to be talking in a friendly manner. We had supposed, up to this time, that the doctors always quarreled when they met. Perhaps the intervening five miles makes a difference.

Dr. Howell of Macon, was in town last Friday, and by the way, we noticed that he took dinner with Doc. also. Take heed, Oh! ye Tecumseh Doctors, and be at peace among yourselves.—Thess. V. 13.

Samuel Rogers has concluded that high and lofty tumbling may amuse the spectators, but is not condusive to health, especially when the tumbler lights upon his head upon the hard ground, falling as he did from a load of stalks the other day. Well, Sam, we are sorry for you, but must reserve most of our sympathy for next week, because there will be lots of men with sorer heads than you have got after the votes are counted.

THE FISHING GROUNDS AT BREST.

We left our pleasant home in Cambridge with horse and carriage, for a few days recreation at Monroe and Brest, passing over the La Plaisance Bay military road, which was in excellent condition.

It was with many pleasant remembrances we called on our friends Frank Davidson of Tecumseh, Rev. Peter Sharp of, Ridgeway, and John Britton of the new city at the R. R. crossing, not omitting our old pioneer friend Cecil Clark, now eighty-six years of age.

We were pleased to note the improvement over the Indian trail which it was our good fortune, at the age of 18, to pass over on foot and alone between Monroe and Tecumseh, full fifty-five years ago. We shall not forget the grandeur of the wild and unbroken forest of over twenty miles without a habitation except the wigwam of the Indians, the rightful owner of this broad domain. Century after century the morning sun had lighted up this noble forest and the parting evening rays had gilded the smoke as it curled aloft from the humble wigwam.

In the pleasant afternoon we came within the limits of the city. It was a pleasure to look on the rock-bottom of the river, and the old grist-mill which is said to have annually ground the corn for over 70 years. We arrived at the city residence of our brother on Cass street, with a true and cordial welcome of the family. We visited at the residence of our honored friend Judge Talcott E. Wing; also, called on Hon Joseph M. Sterling, who has large and beautiful farms near the city with splendid plantations of grapes and a herd of the best blooded stock in the county. On the next morning, with a mild and cheerful October air, we drove out to Brest, passing over the memorial grounds where Gen. Proctor with the British regulars and over 2000 Indians, killed, scalped and tortured the small army of Gen. Winchester, January 22, 1813. We arrived at Brest over a good road of seven miles from Monroe, there met our brother Jesse N. Dewey, who with Joseph B. Dewey owns the long ago far-famed harbor of Brest and adjoining plantations. Here in the harbor lay several fishing boats of a carrying capacity of about four tons each, rigged with two masts and sails. On the shore are 10 or 12 buildings to accommodate those engaged in fishing, and among them is the large refrigerator house, 30x60 feet, where between 25 and 75 tons of fish are annually frozen for the eastern and southern markets. Just outside at anchor one mile off shore, was the splendid passenger steamer "L. Birckhead," of 100 tons burthen. Also in the distance, on the somewhat boisterous waters of Lake Erie, was estimated in different directions, fully 16 miles of seines and "pounds." The sail boats with steamers and seines all belong to the two Dewey Brothers, who employ a large number of men in the fishing business. Their catch has been, from 3 to 4 tons a day, mostly herring and a few sturgeon, with a ready sale for all. When the days become colder the white fish will run and then from 5 to 8 tons will be the usual daily supply from the pounds.

We got aboard the captain's "gig" and were rowed out to the steamer which had two decks, admired cabins, state-rooms and pilot-house. Steam was up and the order was given to slip the cable which was attached to a buoy. Our course was laid for the West Sister Island, then toward Detroit river, then in the neighborhood of the seines and pounds where we saw the fishermen take fully a ton of fish from the pounds. We then steered for a flag-staff near where the anchor lay, and from thence to Stony Creek. Thus was the greater part of a beautiful October day spent on Lake Erie.

Here at Brest were a number of friends and relatives, also our much esteemed friend Mr. Manour, who was an eye witness of the battle of River Raisin and well remembers the scenes of the massacre. He was also chainman for Musgrove Evans at the surveying out of the U. S. military road from Detroit to Chicago, in 1825, and was assistant in laying out the La Pleasant Bay military road from Monroe to Cambridge in the year 1832. He is one of the last survivors of the pioneer surveyors, but strong and vigorous at 80 years of age.

Brest was represented in 1837, on an excellently lithographed and beautifully colored map, as a city with broad avenues, lined with palatial residences and handsome parks. The extended river front had continuous lines of docks, above which towered on either side lofty warehouses, filled with the merchandize of the world. The largest steamers were represented as sailing up past the city, and the docks crowded with large sail vessels, while the streets were thronged with busy life of all nations. The contemplative traveler standing near what was the City Bank, representing $100,000 in its vaults, would never dream how great possibilities had been unrealized in the ruins of the city of Brest.

On our homeward journey, we reviewed the grounds where, 53 years ago last March, we were encamped in the wilderness among the lofty maples for two weeks, employed in making maple sugar, seven miles from the nearest resilience, except those of wolves, bears and Indians.

THE CORN.

The corn the corn,
[illegible] forth in [illegible] upon the tender tow'r;
Oh! how it shoots,
Beneath light boots,
To make man use the wicked words he can not well forego!

The corn, the corn,
The smiling corn!
How many a tongue could tell of woes their tender toes have borne!
How many a maid,
Austere and staid,
Hath vented forth a curse, and saintly men have sworn.

The corn, the corn,
The smiling corn!
There is a lesson to be learnt in every tender shoot;
Corns see the light
Because men fight
To get a foot fixt into a ten-inch boot.

THE SUMMIT OF THE EARTH.

Up in the northern Catskills there is a rock which the guides call "Prospect Point," whose summit affords a wonderful view of the surrounding highlands. You can see the Berkshire Hills and the rocky west-shore of the Hudson, and far in the north the blue heights of the Adirondacks with the dome-like summit of Mount Marcy, the highest mountain in the State of New York. At sunrise the top of that dome often looms like a huge blue cloud above the haze of the horizon, and considering its distance from the Catskills, it seems strange that the height of such a lofty summit is hardly one-fourth of the altitude attained by several extinct volcanoes in the Sierras of Eastern California.

In Central Asia, however, there is a mountain whose elevation exceeds that of the highest California peaks by not less than twelve thousand feet, and whose top, if it could be transported to New York, would tower above the ridge of the Adirondacks like a tall pine-tree above a coppice of hawthorn and hazel bushes. Mount Everest the English surveyors have named that summit of the earth, but the natives call it the Nunaghir—the "Abode of Light," because the morning sun gilds its crest a full hour before the first glimmering of dawn reaches the valleys of the foothills. The best view of its gigantic peak can be obtained from the rocks above the defile of Kaskan, which crosses the main ridge of the Himalaya on the road from Thibet to Northern India.

The Himalaya foothills are clothed with forests of sago-palms, mangos and other tropical trees: eight thousand feet higher up the vegetation resembles that of Northern Canada, and where the last dwarf pines dwindle to mere shrubs, the traveler is still several thousand feet below the highest point of the pass. But that height itself is only a halfway station of the snow region: where tiers of icy precipices rise from the tableland up to a ridge that stretches away to the east, and culminates in a stupendous double pyramid of everlasting snow, the twin-summit of the Nunaghir.

Near the defile of Kaskan there is a little dagakhund, or mountain-house; where travelers can obtain food and shelter, and where English tourists often spend a few days to enjoy a prospect that is supposed to be the grandest mountain-view of the Eastern Continent. To the north the highlands of Turkistan, Afghanistan and Thibet are in full view; in the west the valley of the Upper Indus and its tributaries, which, according to the Indian tradition, were the five rivers of Paradise. In the east the snowy crests of the Himalayas are visible for a distance of several hundred miles; and in the south the terrace land of Northern India extends like a boundless ocean of undulating hills toward the plain of the coast of the Arabian Sea.

On a clear day one can see the towers of Peshawar in the valley of the Indus. The height of Mount Everest above the bottom of the valley is about twenty-eight thousand feet, or more than five English miles, so that a pole five miles long, if you could plant it bolt upright, would just about reach up to the level of the Nunaghir. That same pole would reach to the bottom of the deepest sea, for it is a strange fact that the greatest depth of the ocean corresponds almost exactly to the greatest elevation of the mountains of this earth. But if a nation of giants could build a flight of stairs from the foot-hills to the crest of Mount Everest it would take a traveler at least three days to climb up to the top, for that staircase would be seventy-five miles long and contain about half a million steps.

The native Highlanders have learned to estimate altitudes by the color of the sky. At the height of fifteen thousand feet the hue of the firmament is a deep reddish-blue, higher up it becomes slate-colored and at last almost black, for the bluish tinge of the sky is due to the presence of moisture in the air. On the ridge of the Himalayas the atmosphere is so dry that timber never rots, and the monks of the Buddhistic convents can preserve the bodies of their dead without embalming them.

In looking down from a high mountain upon a large plain the elevation can also be estimated by the extent of the view, for with every thousand feet upward the visible horizon recedes about fifty English miles, so that a person standing on the top of Mount Everest, where no mountain on earth could obstruct his view, would have a lookout of nearly one thousand five hundred miles in every direction. Looking forward and backward by turns he could see (only in dim outlines, of course) regions as remote from each other as the City of New York from the City of Mexico: the boundaries of his horizon would enclose an area of eighty thousand square leagues. Such mountain-ranges as the Mexican Sierras would look like jagged rocks two miles beneath his feet, the European Alps like low foot-hills, and the Adirondacks would seem to blend with the undulations of the plain.

But in reality no human being has ever reached that "summit of the Earth," nor any height within six thousand feet of it. The steepness of the peak is not the chief obstacle, for with ropes and ice-axes the travelers in Switzerland manage to climb up almost perpendicular precipices, but at an elevation of twenty thousand feet above the sea-level the air is so thin that breathing becomes very difficult. People who have ventured to ascend to twenty-two thousand feet have been almost overcome with dizziness and a pain resembling a nervous headache combined with neuralgia, their eyes have grown dim, their ears have rung, [illegible] obliged them to return to a less rarefied atmosphere. And after reaching a height where the air becomes absolutely unendurable for human lungs, the ridge of Mount Everest is still seven thousand feet above you, and it is probably easier to reach the North Pole than the very top of the peak.

Even the ascent of the table-land above the Kaskan Pass is no child's play, but the marvelous sights and sounds of that ice-world amply reward the tourist who has learned to brave the dangers of the glacier-clefts. From the ridge of the plateau which has been called the "Roof of the World," some fifteen thousand square miles of icefields and snow-peaks are in sight, and in spring time the echo of the avalanches resembles the roll of continuous thunder. In midsummer, too, large masses of mingled rocks and ice detach themselves from the cliffs, and in the clear air of the big lands their descent over the steep mountain-sides can sometimes be observed from such a distance that a full minute passes before the reverberation of the hills announces the fall of the ponderous rocks. From the higher ridges the mountaineers hear now and then a sound that resembles the echo of a distant explosion, whose origin, never fully explained, is the subject of many fanciful speculations. It is supposed that the influence of the warm summer days, alternating with the cold nights, expands the ice crust of the glaciers till the strain overcomes its power of resistance and splits it asunder as hot water bursts the shell of an egg. It is certain that the crevasses, or clefts, in the upper glaciers often reach down to the very bottom of the ice-mass, with a horizontal extension of ten or twelve thousand yards. People who have heard the whip-like crack produced by the breaking of the ice on a frozen river may imagine the detonation when a mountain of solid ice bursts open for a distance of seven English miles. Hard winters conceal these clefts with a cover of snow, and make the passage of the glaciers extremely dangerous, but it must be a wonderful sight when the storm-wind raises the snow in drifts that scud over the ice fields in the form of funnels and whirling pillars, and often seem to dance together like specters in fluttering winding sheets.

On clear days the shadow of Mount Everest moves slowly over the table lands of Thibet, and fifty miles north of the Hinialayas there are valleys whose inhabitants fear the south wind (coming straight from the icy highlands) as the people of our prairie States dread a northwest gale. The shadow of the Nunaghir is their sun dial, and in mid-summer its snowy peak is almost constantly in view, as a white pyramid in daytime and as a luminous beacon during the larger part of the night, for in June the rays of the sun linger on its crest till after ten o'clock, and reappear before two in the morning.

No living being, perhaps, has ever been up there, for even the eagles dread the air of the icy heights; but fifty miles west of the peak, where the backbone of the Himalayas rises several thousand feet above the snow-line, troops of wild sheep often cross the ridge at a height where a man would perish with cold. The hill-foxes, too, have accustomed themselves to the rarefied air in a way which shows the power of habit when its influence extends through many generations.

Hunting-dogs are as unable as their masters to breathe the atmosphere of the higher ridges, and even at an elevation of twenty thousand feet they hesitate to go any further, and betray their uneasiness by uttering a kind of coughing bark and rubbing their noses against the snow. But the mountain sheep go several thousand feet higher, and constantly cross the ridge between the highlands of Thibet and the head waters of the Indus. Their favorite pasture-grounds are the valleys at the very foot of the glaciers, where they browse a kind of short, sweet grass that is found nowhere else. Their chase is the favorite sport of the Himalaya mountaineers, but without stratagem and a perfect knowledge of the territory it is almost impossible to approach their haunts, for at the first sign of danger they make straight for the snow-fields and retire to heights where no hunter can follow them.—Felix L. Oswald, in Youth's Companion.

Water from Boiled Vegetables.

The water in which green peas are boiled should not be thrown away. It contains much of the saline constituents of the peas, some soluble casein, and has a fine flavor, the very essence of the peas. If to this, as it comes from the saucepan, be added a little stock, delicious soup is produced, requiring nothing more than seasoning. I add a few words in advocacy of the further adoption in this country of the French practice of using as potage, the water in which vegetables generally (excepting potatoes) have been boiled. When we boil cabbage, turnips, carrots, &c., we dissolve out of them a very large proportion of their saline constituents, which are absolutely necessary for the maintenance of health: salts, without which we become victims of gout, rheumatism, lumbago, neuralgia, gravel, and all the ills that human flesh, with a lithic acid diathesis, is heir to, i. e., about the most painful series of all its inheritances. The potash of these salts existing therein, in combination with organic acids, is separated from these acids by organic combustion, and is presented to the baneful lithic acid of the blood and its tissues, the stony torture-particles of which it converts into soluble lithate of potash, and thus enables them to be carried out of the system. I know not which father of the church invented fast-days and soup maigre, but could almost suppose that he was a scientific monk, who had learned the beneficent action of organic potash salts on the blood, and therefore used the authority of the church to enforce their frequent use among the faithful.—Knowledge.

AYER'S PILLS.

A large proportion of the diseases which cause human suffering result from derangement of the stomach, bowels, and liver. AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS act directly upon these organs, and are especially designed to cure the diseases caused by their derangement, including Constipation, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Headache, Dysentery, and a host of other ailments, for all of which they are a safe, sure, prompt, and pleasant remedy. The extensive use of these PILLS by eminent physicians in regular practice, shows unmistakably the estimation in which they are held by the medical profession.

These PILLS are compounded of vegetable substances only, and are absolutely free from calomel or any other injurious ingredient.

A Sufferer from Headache writes:

"AYER'S PILLS are invaluable to me, and are my constant companion. I have been a severe sufferer from Headache, and your PILLS are the only thing I could look to for relief. One dose will quickly move my bowels and free my head from pain. They are the most effective and the easiest physic I have ever found. It is a pleasure to me to speak in their praise, and I always do so when occasion offers.

W. L. PAGE, of W. L. Page & Bro."

Franklin St., Richmond, Va., June 3, 1882.

"I have used AYER'S PILLS in numberless instances as recommended by you, and have never known them to fail to accomplish the desired result. We constantly keep them on hand at our home, and prize them as a pleasant, safe, and reliable family medicine. FOR DYSPEPSIA they are invaluable.

J. T. HAYES."

Mexia, Texas, June 17, 1882.

The REV. FRANCIS B. HARLOWE, writing from Atlanta, Ga., says: "For some years past I have been subject to constipation, from which, in spite of the use of medicines of various kinds, I suffered increasing inconvenience, until some months ago I began taking AYER'S PILLS. They have entirely corrected the costive habit, and have vastly improved my general health."

AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS correct irregularities of the bowels, stimulate the appetite and digestion, and by their prompt and thorough action give tone and vigor to the whole physical economy.

A CURE FOR GRAVEL.

A Common and Painful Complaint—A Statement you may Confide in.

It seems to have been reserved for Dr David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., to accomplish, through his preparation widely known as KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, what others have failed to compass. The subjoined letter will be found of vital interest to sufferers from gravel and to the general public:

ALBANY, March 20, 1884.

Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

Dear Sir—Let me tell you frankly that I have never been partial to proprietary medicines, as I believe the majority of them to be nothing better than obtaining money from people whom suffering makes ready to catch at any hope of relief. They are mean cheats and delusions. But your Favorite Remedy I know by happy experience to be a totally different thing. I had been a sufferer from gravel for years, and had resorted to many eminent physicians for relief, but no permanent good came of it. About three years ago your Favorite Remedy was recommended to me. I can give you the result in a sentence: I tried it and it cured me completely. I am confident it saved my life. You can use this letter if you think best.

Yours, etc.,
NATHAN ACKLEY.

Captain Nathan Ackley was for a long time connected with the Canal Appraisers office in Albany. He is well known and writes for no purpose but to do good to others.

As a medicine for all diseases of the blood, liver, kidneys and digestive organs, Kennedy's Favorite Remedy has fairly won its high reputation. Write if desirable to Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA

Works through the blood, regulating, toning and invigorating all the functions of the body.

Ringworm Humor and Salt-Rheum.

RAYNHAM, MASS., Aug. 12, 1879.

C. I. HOOD & Co.: Gentlemen— * * * * I have had ringworm humor and salt rheum so badly that my body was covered with raw sores; so, also, my head and face. I have had any number of doctors in the last seven years, and none of them could cure me. One day my mother was in the city of Taunton, and found one of your cook books, and in reading it I found many people testifying to cures from the use of your Sarsaparilla and Olive Ointment. I felt forced to try it, although I had seen many things advertised that never did me any good. I have now taken two small bottles and one large one of Sarsaparilla, and used three boxes of Ointment. I now call myself cured. Nothing can be seen of the humor but the dim outlines of the sores. I shall take two more bottles, and then the cure will be complete.

I am gratefully yours,
EDGAR F. WHITMAN.

Biliousness, Sick Headache.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.

MESSRS. C. I. HOOD & CO.: Gents—Please send me by express two bottles HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA and a few Cook Books for distribution. Your preparation has worked wonders in the case of my wife, who has been troubled with sick headache and biliousness for years. She only took one-half teaspoonful at a dose, and has not been so well for five years as now. She found that within a week after taking it she felt very much better, and is now entirely free from those severe headaches. She has not taken any of any account since last spring, and what little she had is lent to do some others some good, and we must have it in the house.

Yours truly,
HOMER B. NASH.

TRACKING A MURDERER.

A Sheriff on the Track of George Furnival Who Murdered Five Persons in Kansas—Crime Throughout the Country.

OMAHA, Neb., October 28.—Sheriff Seibbel, of Nance County, was in the city Sunday on his way to Mississippi after a man supposed to be George Furnival, charged with the murder of Harry Percival, wife and child, and Messrs. Band and Mais, in Nance County, a few weeks ago. Seibbel, who was very close-mouthed, would not state to what part of Mississippi he was going, nor would he say whether the suspected person was in custody or being shadowed. He has received several telegrams from some point in Mississippi and seemed to feel rather confident that the suspect is the murderer.

He took with him a requisition to the Governor of Mississippi for Furnival, and this looks as though the right man had been tracked to his hiding place. During the past week some new developments have been made in the mystery, among which is the discovery of Mrs. Percival and her underclothing, including a chemise, which was found secreted in a corner of the house. The chemise was cut with a knife across the breast, and looked as if torn from the body. The sheriff intimates that others besides Furnival are suspected of being implicated.

DECATUR, Tex., October 28.—L. W. Fambro, a prominent merchant of this place, was shot and killed by William Chambliss of the Glen Hall saloon. The fight was the result of an old feud. Each man fired five shots. Chambliss was arrested.

THIBADEUX, La., October 28.—William Gray, colored, was shot and killed by Wash Lyons on Grand Caillon at a political mass meeting. Gray favored Gay and Lyons supported Kellogg in the Congressional contest. Lyons attempted to break up the mass meeting and fired on and killed Gray. Lyons escaped.

WILMOT, O., October 28.—Three young men, brothers, named Taam, quarreled with a stranger near here Sunday. Tragic Death of the Father of Murat Halstead.

CINCINNATI, O., October 28.—Colonel Griffin Halstead, the aged father of Murat Halstead, of the Commercial-Gazette, met with a tragic death some time Saturday evening while walking from New London to his home near Paddy's Run, in Butler County, this State. He had been attending a meeting in New London and started to walk home, a distance of over a mile, after the night meeting adjourned. He was not seen alive after that. Sunday morning about eight o'clock an intelligent shepherd dog belonging to the family attracted the attention of one of the grand-sons by running back and forth between the farm-house and a bridge crossing a ravine about two hundred yards from the house, and manifesting a desire for some one to accompany him. The boy went to the bridge and discovered his grand-father lying dead in the ravine. He had stumbled over some rubbish at the bridge and fallen, missing the bridge his head struck the opposite side of the ravine and his neck was broken, causing instant death. He was eighty-three years of age.

When those at Choo Chu, Fu had left the place, the Chinese soldiers went to their houses and destroyed everything they could find, and, it is said, outraged the female converts. The mob destroyed, not only the Roman Catholic places of worship, but those belonging to English Presbyterians and other missions. The Wesleyan chapel at Chan Tsung, a large trading mart, a few hours' journey from Canton, was destroyed September 14, by a mob.

A MYSTERY SOLVED.

The Remains of Gabriel E. Labell, an Inmate of a Soldiers' Home Found—Executive Clemency Asked.

AUGUSTA, Me., October 28.—Five years ago Gabriel E. Labell, an inmate of the Togus Soldiers' Home, disappeared mysteriously. The last seen of him he was going towards the woods with another man whose name is not known. Shortly before he had received a considerable sum of pension money. Recently a grave covered with flat stones was found in the woods. On Sunday the Deputy Sheriffs opened it and found a quantity of charred human bones. It is believed that the bones are those of Labell and that he was led into the woods, murdered and robbed, the murderer afterward attempting to destroy the body. A short distance from the grave was an excavation where apparently a fire had been made. Small pieces of bone were also found here. Labell belonged in Montreal, Quebec, and has a sister living there.

BARONESS VON BERCKEFELDT,

A Niece of Richard Wagner, the Composer, Found Living in Absolute Poverty on the Outskirts of Chicago.

CHICAGO, October 28.—The discovery was made yesterday that the Baroness Von Berckefeldt, niece of Richard Wagner, the composer, is living in absolute poverty with her husband and five small children in one room of a house on the outskirts. The husband, Baron Von Berckefeldt, a nobleman by birth, once a staff officer in the army of Hanover, next a Captain of grenadiers in the Prussian army and later commander of the seaboard of Dantzig, is, although nearly crippled with rheumatism, working for a dollar a day in a blood fertilizing factory. The lady, whose father was one of the three brothers Brockhause, of the great Leipsic publishing house, alleges in a long story that she was defrauded of her estate, that ill health drove her husband from military service, and that they came to this country to restore their fallen fortunes; that the effort has been unsuccessful and that they are now next door to starving and homeless. Extensive litigation over their father's estate is now, she says, in progress, but her action in promoting the litigation has so estranged her wealthy brothers and sisters that they refuse to give her a penny.

Wilbur F. Storey Dead.

CHICAGO, Ill., October 28.—It was announced last night that Wilbur F. Storey, veteran proprietor of the Times, was dying. Late in the afternoon the relatives and heirs who took the initiative in the recent legal proceedings, applied through counsel to Judge Knickerbocker, of the Probate Court, for an order to see the veteran journalist on the ground that he was in a dying condition. The Judge granted the application, but Hon. Lyman Trumbull, representing Mrs. Storey, at once took an appeal to the Superior Court. This step will prevent the order from going into effect for at least twenty days. While the sufferer's condition, it is stated, by those cognizant of the facts makes his demise but a question of a few hours.

POLITICAL ARITHMETIC.

Next Tuesday the great political battle will be fought. The hosts on both sides are arrayed in line, all voters have by this time chosen their positions and but little remains to be done except to cast the votes and count them. Could we look into the future and foretell the figures which will be flashed over the wires next Wednesday morning we could relieve many an anxious doubter of much anxiety. But as this is impossible, we can indulge in the harmless pastime of prophesying. A few cold figures will be interesting to say the least.

The logic of the Democratic ticket is to carry the South, New York, Connecticut, New Jersey and Indiana. The last state could be lost or both Connecticut and New Jersey without defeating Cleveland. The loss of New York alone would defeat him. The states which have already held elections have unmistakably shown the drift of the political tide. Arkansas went heavily Democratic, Maine and Vermont heavily Republican, as was expected and conceded. West Virginia and Ohio were stubbornly fought for, on both sides. In the former state in 1880, the Democrats carried it in November by a plurality over Garfield of 41,148 and a majority over Garfield and Weaver of 2069. In October 1884, the Democrats have a clear majority over the combined Republican and Greenback fusion vote of 5,321, more than doubling their majority of four years ago.

The October election of 1880 in Ohio gave the Republicans a plurality of 19,005, Garfield carried the state by a plurality of 34,227 and a clear majority of 27,771. In October 1884, their plurality is reduced to 11,324, while the majority is wiped out and carried to 1,207 on the minority side.

Here is the practical question to be solved in political arithmetic. If the Democrats double their majority in West Virginia and the Republican majority is reduced one half in Ohio, what result will the same ratio of Democratic gain produce in the debatable states? It will carry New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Indiana, California and Nevada by heavy reliable majorities, and there is no reasonable doubt of Democratic success in any of these states. But the Cleveland and Hendricks forces are not content with these. They purpose making a vigorous assault on the Republican fortress in the North west. They intend to carry Ohio, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin. Here are a few cold figures applicable to these states. In Ohio the prohibition vote on the 14th inst. was 9,004. The Prohibitionists claim that they will pole at least 20,000 next Tuesday. The count in Cincinnati reveals the fact that 7,000 illegal votes were thrown at the recent election. The deduction of that vote and the increase of the Prohibition vote, will, it is confidently expected, take the state from the Blaine column.

In Michigan in 1880 the total vote was 351,833, divided as follows—Rep. 185,341; Dem. 131,597; Grb. 34,895. Republican majority 18,849. The separate Prohibition vote was 842, practically nothing. The aggregate vote this fall will be ten per cent larger than in 1880 or about 385,000. The Republican majority, at the ratio it held in 1880 should be 21,000. But the Butler vote in Michigan is much larger than the Greenback vote was in 1880. The Democrats have suffered no loss. The Independent Republican vote, although not large will assist Cleveland a few hundred votes. The Prohibitionists will pole at least 25,000 votes. David Preston puts the vote at that figure, while many estimate it at double that amount. If figured at 25,000, it will take 20,000 votes from the Republicans. The increase in the Butler vote over 1880 will be at least 10,000. Independent vote say 5,000, Republican Prohibition vote say 20,000. Total 35,000. Deduct the natural Republican majority figured on the basis of 1880 and we have a balance of 10,000 for the fusion ticket. This is a fair estimate on the electoral ticket. When it comes to Governor, David Preston will pole a vote that will astonish the natives, although we should hardly feel like betting on his election.

The same process of reasoning can be applied with fairness to Lenawee county. The natural Republican majority in this county figured on the basis of 1880 is 1,000. The fusion strength is at least 500 votes more than the Democratic vote of 1880. Estimating the Prohibition vote at 1,000, the Republican loss from that source at 500, this loss with the increased fusion vote will neutralize the Republican majority. The Democrats and Nationals of Lenawee County have every incentive to work without ceasing from now till next Tuesday night. Earnest work will elect the whole or a good proportion of their county ticket.

UNION PROHIBITION TICKET.

For President—John P. St. John, of Kansas.
For Vice President—William Daniel, of Maryland.

A TRIBUTE TO ST. JOHN.

Mr. Robert J. Burdett, who is known throughout the country as the gagins of the Burlington, Ia. Hawkeye, which is an unwavering Republican party paper, pays the following tribute to the Prohibition candidate:

If Governor John P. St. John should be elected President of the United States, there would be a perfectly unspoiled citizen in the White House. The elevation would not hurt him a particle, and his friends of to-day would still be his dearest friends to-morrow. Unassuming, modest, strong in his friendships and convictions, I believe there is no honester man in public life in America; no man more conscientious, more consistent in his teachings and his practice. Through a long, hard, single-handed struggle with adverse fortunes, St. John at last reached a high place and reaped high rewards, and he has come through his long fight with clean hands, without a smear or a taint upon his character. And strong and pronounced as are his qualities as a leader of men, an executive officer, an orator, the brightest traits of the man's character shine forth most brilliantly in his domestic life, in the social circle. It has often been my good fortune to have him a guest in my home, and no man meets a warmer welcome at its doors. From the little woman whose voice will never bid him welcome to an earthly home again, down to the Prince, the whole house was glad when his well known voice was heard in the hall, and many a long afternoon and merry evening has flown away like an hour with anecdote, reminiscences, argument, suggestion, story of travel and adventures of long ago, dropping from his lips. All children love St. John, and he knows how to talk to them. Some of the best addresses to the little people I ever heard were made by him in the little villages of Ardmore and Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania, to the most delighted audiences that ever listened to a Presidential candidate. His voice, his manner, is pleasing, easy, and attractive, his eyes are tender as a woman's, his sympathies quick and earnest, and withal, he carries in his well-poised head a stock of hard, honest, rare, common sense. He comes of good Huguenot stock, as his name indicates, and "Saint" is the quaint and pleasant name by which his near relatives addressed him. He makes friends of men without apparantly trying to win them: where he is best known his strength is greatest, and whether he polls ten thousand votes or ten millions, he will be the same St. John—a big-hearted, clear-headed, honest, consistent man. I am aware, by the way, that the Hawkeye isn't an overwhelmingly St. John paper, but then it is a great broadsouled paper, that rejoices to speak the truth of a foeman worth of its true steel pen.

That's What They Want to Do.

It has been discovered in some quarters that St. John may defeat the Republican party. That is the powerful argument used by Republicans in reproachful accents to men who are acting upon conviction, who have no trades to make, who worship no party and who believe in the right.

An old negro who was perched on the top of a ladder washing windows felt his support tremble, and looking down in alarm he saw a pig vigorously scratching its back against the bottom round. "G'way fum dar!" yelled the excited African, g'way fum dar? You'll be doin' some mischief bimeby!" The pig continued to scratch. It did not care whether the darkey got a tumble or not. It rubbed the ladder until the African came down in a heap.

That is about the attitute of the St. John party as we take it. It has cut loose from all other parties, and it is a matter of supreme indifference to its members whether the Republican darky falls or not. It is going to scratch for reform just the same. When the Prohibitionists put St. John in the field they did not do it with the idea that they were supporting Blaine. They knew exactly what they were about. Blaine and Cleveland are alike to them. They are for neither. They are for St. John. In the course of time our Republican friends will get this thing through their heads. The reason which the organs give for Prohibitionists abandoning St. John is the very one which induces many of them to vote for him. They hope to beat Blaine and swallow up his party. While this scheme may shock some very good people the Herald will remind them that it is a great American privilege. Parties have died and been born again. May be the Republican party is on the eve of a performance of that kind.

Believing that there is no other question now before the people, which is paramount, to this one, is a matter of utter indifference to us which of the two old parties survives, or which one perishes first. Neither of them shall be in power by our act or choice. To vote the Union Prohibition ticket, will help to elect that ticket, and if all will vote their honest convictions, this party will triumph at the coming election.

But, the objector urges, "is it not morally certain that one of the old parties will elect this time, and should we not, therefore, have a choice as to which one it shall be?"

We should entertain no such preference as will lead to support either of them. Besides, nothing is morally certain, in this line, only that which we help to make so. Let us see to it that we help in the right direction, and we may safely trust God for consequences. As Prohibitionists, we have no sympathy with either the Democrat or the Republican party; success of our organization and principles will prove the overthrow of them both and the sooner the better for the country. The choice of evils is the doctrine of devils, and so long as we consent to act upon this policy the devil will not fail to furnish us with the means for an evil choice. If needs be, let us dare to do right, although it may place us for a time in the minority, and let those bear the responsibility of it who from mere policy, "go with the multitude to do evil."—Mich. Prohibitionist.

Who Ought to Vote for St. John.

The young man who casts his first ballot.

The old man who will probably cast his last ballot.

The father whose example will be followed by his sons.

The father who wants to protect his daughter from the curse of being married to a drinking man.

The total abstainer, who does not need saloons.

The drinking man, who feels the tempting power of saloons.

The moderate drinker, who may become a drunkard if the saloons continue.

The rich man whose taxes are greatly increased by saloons.

The poor man, who is compelled to support an army of worthless men because they are rumsellers.

The patriot, who loves his country.

The Christian, who, like the good Samaritan, loves his neighbor.

The minister, whose flock is ravaged by the wolf of strong drink.

The Sunday school superintendent, who is an example to his school.

The teacher, who is the leader of his scholars.

The business man, because the liquor traffic injures his trade.

The landlord, because the rumseller often gets much of the money that ought to be paid for rent.

The railroad official, because liquor disqualities men from properly discharging their duties.

The railroad stockholders, because drunken employes destroy the property of railroads, through carelessness caused by drink.

Travelers, because their lives are imperiled by being in the hands of intemperate men.

Politicians, because the election of St. John will end the rule of rum barons.

Every man ought to vote for St. John, as he is the only candidate who is not compelled to be on the defensive.—Temperance Gazette.

It is much easier to sneer at Prohibition than to point to an instance in history where a question having as much of the heart and conscience of the country behind it has failed to succeed. Within the memory of men who are not yet old it was vehemently asserted that the anti-slavery movement could not succeed. Men sneered at this movement as they now sneer at the prohibition movement. But the heart and the conscience of the country were behind the anti slavery movement. Men were praying for its success in every part of the land. The pulpits of the country sent forth eloquent appeals in behalf of universal freedom, and the cause succeeded. So to-day men and women are praying for the success of prohibition in every part of the land. The pulpits of the country are becoming fully aroused. Eloquent men are pleading with all their powers for the success of the home in its fight against the saloons. All the conditions are favorable to the speedy success of the cause of prohibition, and prohibition will succeed. Within the lifetime of men who will not live twenty-five years longer prohibition will be as completely and emphatically successful as the anti-slavery movement already has been. We advise all our readers to get on the right side of this great question in time to share in the honor of the victory.—Lever.

Prohibitionists, Look To Your Ticket.

The enemies of our cause will use all manner of deception to capture prohibition votes next Tuesday. Let no friend of the cause be decieved by them. Look out especially for spurious prohibition tickets. There will be a special committee of men at the polls to distribute tickets and slips. Take no ticket from any man unless you know him to be a PROHIBITIONIST. This is the grandest opportunity you have ever had to show your strength. Let every man do his duty and make himself a committee of one to see that his neighbor does the same.

The November number of the Magazine of Art closes the volume for the year with unusual attractions. The frontispiece of the number is from Mr. F. A. Bridgeman's last salon picture, "The Bath at home, Cairo," and is very suggestive of that artist's gorgeous oriental coloring. This picture accompanies an article on "The American Salon," by Mr. W. C. Brownell, who was until he left this country for Europe, the art critic of the New York World. Mr. Brownell is an admirable critic and he has a fruitful subject. Each one of these papers is illustrated with numerous engravings, some of them from nature, others from rare prints and notable paintings. A complete record of the art news of the month, both in Europe and America will be found in its usual place in the Magazine.—Cassell & Company, Limited, New York.

EDWIN B. WOOD.

A Raisin farmer and an Adrian Attorney were conversing on politics the other day when the conversation turned on the nominees now before the people for Judge of Probate. Mr. Wood's fitness for the place was conceded by both, but the Attorney offered this objection to him. Said he, "Mr. Wood is too modest in his charges. He has done a large amount of Probate business during the past twenty years, from which many lawyers would have become wealthy, but he is still a man of moderate means." Well, said the farmer—"That may be an objection with you, but it is the best recommendation I want. I shall vote for him."

In the Northern part of Lenawee County where Mr. Wood is best known no word of commendaton is needed from us. Everybody knows him, everybody respects him, everybody recognizes his eminent fitness for that office. We are not at all surprised but at the same time are gratified to see that he stands equally well in other sections of the county. It gives us pleasure to copy the following item from last week's Adrian Press, which is a merited compliment to a deserving candidate.

On every hand we hear good words for E. B. Wood, our candidate for Probate judge. He is enjoying now a return of good health, and paid us a visit last week. He is making an active vigorous canvass, and no man is worthier of support. He honors the ticket as a man of high character, strict integrity and superior ability. He has been entrusted with more estates as administrator, executor or guardian, than any four other men in the county. He is familiar with every detail of the office and in this respect Judge Geddes has no advantage over him. Scarcely a regular session weekly, of the Probate court occurs, without Mr. Wood being present interested in some case. There is hardly a man in the northern part of the county, who makes a will, but nominates E. B. Wood as executor. Why? Because of their confidence in his unquestioned honesty and his complete familiarity with the business. It would be a graceful compliment to a worthy man to honor him with the office. Judge Geddes is wealthy. He has for six years enjoyed the favors of the people, and leaves a lucrative office business to do so. Mr. Wood is a man of limited means, though he has had the opportunity while in charge of large estates to secure a competency. He has been faithful to his trusts, and is to-day comparatively a poor man. Judge Geddes has held office for many years and has no special claims upon the people for their suffrages. A man in every respect his equal in ability and a knowledge of the duties of the office is his opponent, so the objection cannot be urged that it is not advisable to put in an untried man. We trust our democratic friends will make a special effort in behalf of Mr. Wood.

Mr. & Mrs. Wm. Ross celebrated the 30th aniversary of their wedded life last Monday evening. A large number of friends were present and enjoyed a very pleasant evening, going away with the wish that the couple might enjoy thirty years more of wedded life.

The Adrian scientific society recently caught a wild beast and experimented upon him with the use of the vapor of gasoline which acted as an anæsthetic, completely subjugating the animal and rendering him perfectly harmless. P. S.—The animal was a real, living, active, long-tailed mouse.

Chas. Strong started for his home at Lawrence, Kan., last Tuesday, having enjoyed his visit in Tecumseh exceedingly. He is now living in Lawrence, and is finely situated there, owning a block of stores and other city property. His sons, Charley and Fred, each own a farm and has a family of his own. We hope his visits to the old Tecumseh home will be more frequent hereafter.

The Star Shoe company have a new business announcement in to-day's paper. Don't fail to read it.

Miss Lillie Wendler of Youngstown, O., and Miss Emma Smith of Toledo, are visiting at Henry Smith's.

F. W. Kelp is preparing for the fall trade, and unfurls his bulletin to the breeze in this week's HERALD.

Our friends whose accounts are due can do us a great favor by paying at once. W. & S. W. Anderson & Co.

The Acme Dime Comedy company is playing this week at Adrian and is highly commended by the Adrian papers.

Prohibition meetings will be held P. M. and evening in Tecumseh this week, Saturday, Nov. 1. John R. Clark and M. J. Fanning.

People who enjoy a good speech should go and hear M. J. Fanning at the Opera House next Saturday evening. He is a "rattler" to talk.

John R. Clark, Tecumseh's temperance orator, is doing some campaign work in Lenawee County this week. He will speak here next Saturday afternoon.

R. Morrison has just finished a job of paper hanging in Dr. Hamilton's parlors which "takes the cake" over anything we have seen lately. It is an elegant job.

M. J. Fanning, who will address the Prohibitionists at the Opera House next Saturday evening, is one of the finest orators in the State. Let everybody turn out and hear him.

Hub Stout received a telegram announcing the serious illness of his mother, who is visiting friends in the western part of New York state, and took the afternoon train on Tuesday for that place.

The campaign winds up this week in Tecumseh with meetings by all the parties. Bob Frazer held forth last evening for the Republicans. Frank Hurd talks this evening for the Democrats, and M. J. Fanning will furnish Prohibition music next Saturday evening.

The Adrian papers are enthusiastic in their praise of the Acme Dime Comedy Company which is playing an engagement of a week in that city. The company begins an engagement of a week at the Opera House in this village next Monday evening. The program will be changed nightly and the admission is only 10 and 20 cents.

Prohibition meetings will be held in Tecumseh next Saturday, to be addressed by Michael J. Fanning of Jackson and John R. Clark. Mr. Clark will speak on the corner by Kinney's furniture at 2 o'clock P. M.; Mr. Fanning at the Opera House in the evening. Mr. Fanning is one of the finest stump orators in the state and should be greeted with a rousing house.

Last Tuesday evening a company of thirty school children visited Met Conklin's and passed a pleasant evening in honor of Miss Hattie's birthday. Mr. Conklin came down to the village with his team and took the visitors to his house and brought them safely home again after the party. The little folks voted it a most enjoyable affair and voted thanks to Met Conklin for his hospitality.

A. J. Kempton, prohibition nominee for Register, is winning golden opinions from all parties in the county where he speaks. A large and enthusiastic gathering listened for nearly two hours, at Kelley's corners, on the evening of the 18th, to his logical and pathetic appeals for principle and pure government. We bespeak a liberal vote for this rising young apostle of the "Saint's faith."

Adrian Record: It is a solemn thing to reside along the paths frequented by candidates for county offices and such. Take the case of F. D. Teachout, of Rome, for instance. Last night along in the evening he was set upon by A. K. Whitmore, J. W. Helme, Jr., Fred Wood, A. Chapelle, Henry Bowen and others and obliged to keep them all night. Think of a crowd like that taking possession of your house.

A good crowd assembled at the Opera House last evening to hear a speech from Robert E. Frazer. Mr. Frazer was not "at his best," but his speech was a good one and was well received by the Republican part of the audience. It was not calculated however, to make any converts. He was very severe on the Democrats and very mild on the Prohibitionists, thought that laboring men had no reason to complain of hard times, and that the country was enjoying prosperity.

Auction Sale.

Tom Hanley's lease having almost expired, he will sell at auction on the farm known as the David O'Riley farm, in the township of Clinton, one mile west of Pennington's corners, and four miles east of Clinton, on the Clinton road, Thursday, Nov. 6, 1884, at 12 o'clock, M., the following property: Four work horses, 2 year old colt, 3 calves, 2 sows and pigs, 3 shoats a Cheshire boar, 20 sheep, 3 milch cows, 2 lumber wagons, buggy, pair bobs, cutter, hay-rack, wheel-rake, cultivators, plows, harrow, fanning-mill and other farm tools, 18 to 20 acres wheat on the ground, quantity of corn, oats, corn-fodder, and other articles too numerous to mention. Terms, 12 months with good notes at interest. Ben Reynolds, Auctioneer.

FARMERS MUTUAL INSURANCE CO.

The annual meeting of the Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. was held at Adrian last Monday. The meeting was called to order by President Cook. Secretary Allis read the minutes of the last meeting which were approved.

Mr. Cook then read his report, as treasurer, for the past year. It showed the following: Actual assessment for 1883, $10,630.80; required amount to be raised, $10,591.12; surplus of assessment, $49.74.

On those who had sold out and removed from the county during the year, the deficiency was $182.61; $150 had been provided to meet this contingency, so that the shortage on this score was $32.61.

Secretary Allis then made his annual report. The amount now insured in the company was $9,099,490; gain during the past fiscal year, $578,470; number of members at this date, 5,333; number of members added during the past year, 284; number of losses during the year, 45. Fifteen of the losses were from lightning, seven of these occuring on the twenty-first of June. Three losses were barns, four houses, and eight animals in the field. The losses and expenses during the year amounted to $9,846.27.—The amount to be raised on each $1,000 for the coming year is (1.111) one dollar, eleven cents and one mill.—Blissfield is the only town in the county which had no losses during the year just closed.

The report was accepted and adopted. The next business before the meeting was the election of a president and treasurer for the ensuing two years, the two offices being filled by one person.

The first ballot resulted as follows:

Whole number of votes	66
Z. Cook	52
J. M. Green	2
J. H. Green	1
A. W. Bradish	9

On motion Mr. Cook was declared unanimously elected.

The election of a director for each of the five districts of the county then followed.

The representatives from each district, on motion, organized into separate caucuses and presented the following directors, who were elected by the meeting.

First district (Woodstock, Rollin, Hudson, Medina), Wm. Brown, of Hudson; Second district (Cambridge, Rome, Dover, Seneca), James M. Judson, of Dover; Third district (Franklin, Adrian, Madison, Fairfield, A. W. Bradish, of Madison; Fourth district (Clinton, Tecumseh, Raisin, Palmyra, Ogden), Warren J. Holdridge, of Raisin; Fifth district (Macon, Ridgeway, Deerfield, Blissfield, Riga), C. C. Lowe, of Ridgeway.

WEDDING BELLS.

On Tuesday of last week a pleasant company assembled at the residence of Rev. H. Shepard in Burr Oak to witness the nuptials of Mr. W. H. Peters and Miss Florence Shepard. Many guests from aboad were in attendance, among whom were Dr. and Mrs. Peters of Blissfield, Mr. H. M. Temple of Tecumseh, and relatives from Cleveland, Ohio, and Adrian. The affair was a social event of more than usual brilliancy. The company were royally entertained, the bridal gifts were numerous and elegant, while music and mirth reigned supreme. Both bride and groom were for many years residents of Tecumseh, where they have hosts of friends who will join us in extending the usual congratulations and hearty good wishes for their prosperity and happiness. The bride was kindly remembered by her old classmates in Tecumseh, Prof. Fairfield and other friends. We append a list of the wedding gifts received. The parties begin housekeeping at once in their Blissfield home.

ACROSS THE CONTINENT.

EDITOR HERALD.—I have been intending to write you ever since my arrival on this coast, but have been so busy sightseeing and moving around, that I have just come to a landing place where I can stop and think of friends so far away. You will remember we started from Tecumseh a party seventeen strong. That is, my wife and sister, Mrs. Hurd, four babies, three trunks, six satchels, and a big lunch basket, the latter crammed with sufficient provender to have fed us all the way to China. Now let me ask you as an unprejudiced observer, how a man whose nervous system has been overtaxed by the cares of business, could expect the aforesaid nerves to return to their normal, healthy condition and have abundant and self sufficient rest when he had two women, four babies, six satchels and a dining-car, in the shape of a lunch basket, to look after, keep together, see that none were strayed or stolen on a journey of three thousand miles across the Continent? Suffice it to say I am the individual who undertook and accomplished this great feat and I still live a monument, as it were, of human endurance taxed to her utmost, but able to rustle as they say here in California. Of our journey I have very little remembrance, it being all mixed up with a horrible nightmare of acrobatic feats with children, satchels, lunch-basket, etc., interspersed with dissolving views of Chicago, Council Bluffs, Omaha and the Rocky Mountains. I really did however, recover sufficiently to get much solid enjoyment out of our stop at Salt Lake City. We took a carriage and drove round to the various objects of interest, rode up on the heights back of the city, where we got a magnificent view of the great Salt Lake Valley, and Salt Lake itself in the distance. I have seen many beautiful views of forrests, lakes, mountains and plains, but I think this one equal if not superior to any of them. On coming down we drove past an ordinary looking enclosure about fifty feet square, surrounded with a common board fence, at one end of which was a very cheap looking iron railing, apparently surrounding a grave; here the driver stopped and we enquired what he was stopping there for? To our astonishment he replied, "to show you the grave of Brigham Young." No stone or costly monument marks the grave of this great man, for he was undoubtedly intellectually great as his works in this wonderful valley will show, and now about two dollars and fifty cents worth of iron railing marks his grave. We asked why this should be, and were told that it was his own request. One cannot help but think what a difference there is between the resting place of this man who was literally the father of a nation and the graves of some of our merchant princes which are marked with such large and expensive monuments. From here we drove to the Mormon Temple and were admitted by the brother in charge. He looked about as sweet as dried peas with one of the most expressionless faces I ever saw. His little speech was evidently all cut and dried, and he rattled it off in a sing-song voice modulated to conform to the musical tones of a cracked fiddle occasionally gaining in power and strength in undoubted competition with the more active cadences of a healthy buzz-saw. His remarks were something like this: "This is the great Mormon Tabernacle, capable of seating fifteen thousand persons. The plans for this building were all made by Bringham Young. This is the largest building in the world with an unsupported roof, that is the roof is made on the principle of an arch with no central supports. This building is also noted for its acoustic properties; if you will go to the other side of the building I will illustrate this for you. First by a whisper, second by scratching my hat with a pin, third by dropping a pin. All of these sounds you will hear with perfect ease, although at such a great distance from me." We accordingly marched to the other side of the immense amphitheatre. Our guide mounted on the platform from which the illustrious Brigham was wont to discourse, and striking his first attitude, threw his chest well forward and hurled a whisper at us which struck us square on the tympanum. It was an old time remark which mothers frequently use in addressing their children: "Do you hear what I say?" Yes, we do, thank you. He now struck his second attitude, holding up a rather dilapidated looking tile on his left hand and drew a pin from the recesses of his outer garment with his right, and gave the aforesaid tile a tremendous scratch from top to bottom. "Did we hear it?" Certainly we did, and began to think that the Old Scratch himself had something to do with producing the one we just heard. He now struck his third attitude, balancing himself lightly on his feet he gently extended his right hand, between the thumb and forefinger of which was suspended a pin; all of a sudden he let it drop and we most undoubtfuly heard it strike; thus was proved to us the wonderful accoustic properties of the Mormon Temple. We were next marched in front of the immense organ and were told there was only one larger in the world. It was built entirely by Mormon mechanics, and certainly does them great credit. We requested the guide to give us a tune, but he said it wasn't his day for music. We next inspected the new Mormon Temple now being built near the old one. This, if ever completed will be a magnificent building, the foundations are immense, and the sidewalls are already over fifty feet high. The only work on it when they have means which are provided by subscriptions of the brethren. The granite used in its construction is quarried out of the mountains by the Mormons. They don't expect to complete the building for years, and the cost of it will run up into the millions. We next viewed the residences of Brigham Young and the principal Mormon elders. These were no great sight, as I have seen hundreds of more beautiful places in Oakland. I was, however surprised to find that among the more wealthy mormons who had a plurality of wives, each wife had a house of her own. Thus you would frequently see in one inclosure half a dozen or more houses each filled with a wife and children, all belonging to the same man. I had supposed they all lived together in one house, but the elders evidently think that no one house is large enough for two families. In the course of our drive a son and daughter of Brigham were pointed out to us, and two more uninteresting ordinary looking people, I never saw in my life. It is said that Brigham left his children one hundred thousand dollars each, so fortunately they don't have to depend on their intellect for a living. After visiting the Theatre, which is a fine new building we were told it was time for us to be on our way, so we drove to the depot and made one more start for the Golden State. Of our travels and adventures I will perhaps give you an account at some future time. With regards to many friends in old Tecumseh, I remain, Yours Truly,

JAMES W. PATTERSON.

WASHINGTON.

The well-known banking house of H. D. Cooke & Co., at Washington, D. C., closed its doors on the 22d. Liabilities $130,000; available assets, $103,000.

A serenade in honor of his election to Congress was tendered, Patent Commissioner Butterworth, at the Arlington Hotel, Washington, a few nights ago. Addresses were made by Indian Commissioner Price and General Raum.

A few days ago President Arthur forwarded a gold watch, through the Governor General of Canada, to Ezra Reed, master of the bark Brazil, of Yarmouth, N. S., for rescuing the crew of the American schooner Nellie Belle. Captain Reed was drowned some weeks ago at sea and the United States authorities requested that the watch be presented to his widow.

It is reported that chills and fever are almost epidemic in all parts of that city, owing to the bad drainage of the Potomac River. Two-thirds of the State, War and Navy Department employes are on the sick list with malaria.

Sixth Auditor Crowell has prepared a statement of receipts and expenditures of the Postoffice Department for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1884, which shows that during the year the payments exceeded the receipts by $3593,137; last year the receipts were $2,352,189 more than the expenditures.

The Acting Judge Advocate General of the Army has submitted his annual report to the Secretary of War. The report shows an increased number of court martials in all branches of the service, and recommends various minor changes in the rules governing military jurisprudence.

The Examiner in Chief of the Patent Office, has rendered a decision awarding to Alexander Graham Bell priority of invention of the telephone receiver. This was awarded by the Examiner below to McDonough. The point at issue is regarded as the principal feature of the telephone invention.

Favorable responses have been received at Washington to letters addressed to the Governors of Arkansas, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, Iowa, Minnesota, and Dakota, soliciting their co-operation and aid in the design to erect at New Orleans a statue of the late Captain Sam Chester Reid, who commanded the United States brig General Armstrong in the memorable battle with a British squadron at Fayal, in 1814, which resulted in saving Louisiana from British conquest.

The President appointed John B. Mead Commissioner to the New Orleans Cotton Exposition for Vermont.

In his annual report, the Second Auditor of the Treasury states that the 37,188 claims, pending in the Pay and Bounty Division include 1,224 claims of Indians who served in the war of the rebellion. He recommends that an appropriation be placed at the disposal of his office to defray the expense of investigating these and other claims of a like character.

THE EAST.

At Philadelphia on the 22d an attempt was made to poison the family of Dr. D. H. Buckingham, a druggist, by placing a quantity of sulphate of copper in the teakettle. It was discovered by the housekeeper, who nearly lost her life in tasting the water. A fifteen-year-old colored boy whom the doctor employed to run errands, was arrested and confessed his guilt, but assigned no reason for the act.

Mrs. W. G. Hill, of Rockland, Mass., died on the 1st of August last. She was under treatment for sleeplessness by Mrs. Dr. Helen Cummins, of Boston, who gave her two bottles of medicine, one of which was a harmless tonic and the other contained two ounces of fluid extract of St. Ignatius bean. The bottles were labelled wrong, and the patient, instead of taking the harmless tonic, took a tablespoonful of the fluid extract of St. Ignatius bean, and died in an hour afterward. The inquest resulted in a verdict of death caused by gross carelessness of the doctress in pasting the labels, and she has been arrested on the charge of murder.

The "Bayfield Savages," Companies A, B and C in the old Nineteenth Massachusetts Regiment, were entertained by Major Ben Perley Poore, the original commander of the battalion, at his residence, West Newburyport, Mass., on the 22d. Lieutenant Greely, who was a private in Company B, was present.

Rev. I. M. Kennedy of Clinton, addressed the Union Club at the Hall, on Wednesday night of last week, in the interest of Prohibition.

Miss Ella Jackson returned from a visit to Hillsdale on Friday, and is on the sick list at present.

Those that attended the skating rink at Britton's on Wednesday night report a pleasant time.

The attendance at the social on Friday night was good, and all report a splendid time. The next social will be held at Rev. W. J. Clark at the parsonage on Friday, Nov. 14th. A cordial invitation to all to come and welcome the pastor and family.

Mr. Warren Jones started for Brooklyn, N. Y., with the fancy team that R. T. Bush purchased of the Garlinghouse brothers. He shipped from Britton's over the Wabash.

Prof. W. H. Parker, the wonderful messmerist and phrenologist, closed his lectures here on Saturday night, and left for Addison Monday where he will give a course.

Rev. W. J. Clark went to Flat Rock Tuesday to attend a funeral.

The Prohibitionists held a meeting at Britton, Monday night, which was addressed by Rev. G. W. Hudson and C. E. Conley of Tecumseh.

The following resolutions were passed and adopted by the Ladies' Mite Society, Oct. 31st., on the death of Mrs. Augusta H. Waring, which occurred Oct. 6th, 1884:

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God in his divine wisdom to remove from our midst our beloved sister, friend and neighbor, Mrs. Augusta H. Waring,

Whereas, She, by her implicit trust in Jesus, simplicity of life and manner and interesting zeal in all works that would upbuild Christ's Kingdom on earth, has left a true record worthy of imitation by us all, therefore

Resolved, That we humbly and submissively bow to the will of Him that "doeth all things well."

Resolved, That while we mourn her departure we have that happy assurance that our loss is her eternal gain; that she only waits with beckoning hand over the river for us to join the society of just men made perfect.

Resolved, that a copy of these resolutions be put upon the Society record; printed in the Michigan Christian Advocate and Tecumseh HERALD and a copy each given to the husband and near relatives of deceased.

MACON MUSIC.

There was a concert at the M. E. church last Saturday evening. The proceeds are to be appropriated for building sheds at the church.

Report says that Capt. Allen is elected by a handsome majority. If this is true, it is a proof of the good sense of the voters of this Congressional district.

Preston received 41 votes in Macon. Still he is not governor.

Robert Cully is reported to be the happiest man in town. It is a boy.

Our school board has engaged a male teacher for the winter term. Better have retained the present incumbent. Frequent changes are very detrimental to the interest of schools.

Sumner Collins spent Sunday in Macon.

Our hamlet is evidently keeping pace with the times. The latest is a skating rink. It is well patronized. Mr. Wheeler, of Leslie is proprietor.

Mark Mills has completed his course in the Detroit Business College, and is now home.

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

Election passed off very quietly. The rain seemed to cool the ardor of most of the zealous ones. The rain undoubtedly kept some from the polls, there being only three hundred and sixty votes polled while there was some four hundred and seventeen names on the register list. The votes counted showed the following result: 360 in all, of which the Prohibitionists polled thirty four, twenty two of which were formerly Republicans and twelve were from the Democratic party. What few other votes were cast are as follows: In majorities our Townsmen D. Keyes running away head of his ticket scoring 104 majority over his Republican opponent. E. B. was next in majority, polling 84 majority. The Presidential Electors, 51 majority, and now at this writing it is reported that D. Keyes is elected Register. Both parties here seem to think that Cleveland is elected President, while the Republicans are shouting for Blaine and claiming his election. For our part we think it is well that the agony is over, at any rate we ourselves feel that the country is safe.

Mrs. Flick from Hedford, near Cleveland Ohio, is visiting friends and relatives here this week.

The State Missionary society will hold its annual meeting with the Congregational church of this place on Saturday afternoon and evening of this week. Certain eminent ministers of their church from this state are expected and an interesting meeting is expected.

The Episcopal church have their church so near completed that they expect to hold service there next Sunday as was predicted. The church presents a very nice appearance on the inside and is the nicest finished of any church in town. So much for Ed. VanDeMark.

We understand that the dwelling house of Chas. Gadd, of Bridgewater, was burglarized on Thursday night of last week of quite a little sum of money taken from the trunk of the hired man, something over one hundred dollars in money.

The chicken pie social at the Methodist church on Wednesday night was very well attended and the supper was excellent, worth twice the price charged, ten cents.

Grand opening of the Clinton Skating Rink with a goodly number of skaters who were regaled with music by the Clinton band.

NEW ORLEANS EXPOSITION.

Director General Burke's Report—The Exhibition Being Overrun with Contributions—Some of the Industries that will be Shown.

NEW ORLEANS, November 4.—Director General Burke has completed his full report of the progress of the preparations for the World's Exposition. The main building has been completed, and the exhibits are now arriving for installation. The extension of Machinery Hall, an iron building, requires only the sash and flooring, making that hall about 1,948 feet in length. But little space remains in the machinery department. The Worthington waterworks were completed yesterday, the water placed in the boilers, and the magnificent plant will be ready on Tuesday to supply three million gallons of water daily. Filtered water is furnished at the rate of 80,000 gallons per hour. Steam will be raised for the purpose of testing the boilers, engines and shafting November 20.

The Horticultural Hall is rapidly being filled with rare plants. Large shipments are arriving from Central America and Florida. Eight thousand Northern and Southern evergreens have been purchased and contributed, and are being rapidly placed in the grounds. The walks will all be completed November 15. The saw mill building, six hundred feet long, was completed yesterday. The building for the Government and State exhibits is the handsomest building on the grounds, and has as much floor space as the Main Centennial building. The Director General notifies the State Commissioners that their exhibits can come along at any time. The building will receive exhibits on the 10th of December. Every State and Territory is now represented. The erection of stables is progressing rapidly, and stalls are being provided to show 1,000 horses. Suitable cattle and horse barns and the stock arena are a half mile from the track. A Wisconsin dispatch says that Jay-Eye-See and Phallas will be exhibited, arrangements being made for noted horses. The stables are 1,800 feet long, and the live stock exhibits the largest ever made before.

Edison's agent has arranged for space for a splendid exhibit and has opened an office in the main building. Six one hundred horse-power engines run their light motor. The agent is arranging to run trains inside the main building around the gallery nearly one mile, and also for roads in the grounds. The Jenny Company commenced foundations for five towers, which with 100 standard arcs and five 36,000 candle power lamps will make the grounds appear as light as day. The Pullman Company have closed arrangements for exhibiting a maniature city of Pullman, 100 feet long and 75 feet wide. The splendid building of the Mexican Commission is nearly ready for occupancy. The Mexican exhibits left the City of Mexico October 31 via the Mexican Central Railroad and El Paso. The Commissioners of France, Mexico, Spain, Brazil, Portugal, Japan, Honduras, Guatemala are here, and arranging for the installation of their exhibits.

Mr. Burke is arranging with Diaz, who will be inaugurated December 1, to adjourn the Mexican Congress on the 10th of December, and also expects the American Congress to adjourn on the 12th of December so that the Exposition can be opened in the presence of the Presidents of the United States, Mexico and the Central American Republics, the heads of departments, and the foreign representatives. The action of the board of management in deferring the opening until President Arthur can inaugurate the Exposition is warmly approved by the community. His warm support of the Exposition is appreciated all over the South, and the management has declared that it will be a source of intense disappointment to the people if it opened without him. The delay will enable the delinquents to get into position and avoid much of the confusion incident to the opening of the Exposition. Mr. Burke reported to the management yesterday that if they would roof the park, over 237 acres, and give him sixty days, the applicants for space would fill it.

The School Master Married McCorkle's Sister.

Knew Dick McCorkle' well, I swar! The ornary little Thug! An' he's got a ranch on the Pecos, you say, an' popular among the cowboys. Great Gosh! I knowd him when he was a flop-mouthed boy. He was a terror, I tell you. We was at school together, me an' him. Pop'lar then? Well, no, not enough to spile him. Why, we boys just despised him. We uster git up in the night to hate him. You see it war this way: The school master wanted to marry his sister—Dick's sister. Dick was a freckled-faced and codfish-eyed plug, an' he never know'd his lessons, but he wasn't licked an' thumped, nor jammed up against the wall, nor batted on the head with a frame of an old slate. The schoolmaster wanted to marry his sister.

"He was let sit with the big girls, an' 'go out' as often as he wanted to. The little spike-haired cur could come late and eat nuts and champ apples in school hours without one word of reproof, an' when he spilled ink on the floor he didn't git a belt on the ear with a McGuffey's third reader. Oh, no. The schoolmaster wanted to marry his sister.

"How we hated that young hoodlum! We tried to lower him in the master's estimation by putting up jobs on him. We were guilty of dead loads of villainy and injustice in our attempts to make the teacher turn on him, but it was always a cold day for us, and we never succeeded, for the school master wanted to marry his sister.

"We couldn't see why the schoolmaster should take revenge on our tender hides, and why we should wear welts and scars while the ignorant nondescript, McCorkle, would put on airs over us, an' would wander singing down the lane with all his imperfections on his red head, an' bring back to the master the tough saplings that were worn out on the jackets of the rest of us. He never got a whack. The schoolmaster wanted to marry his sister.

"I left the school to help in camp on a cattle round-up, an' it was about three months before I came back. The first thing I saw when I got back to school was the master whalin' daylights outen McCorkle with the cover of an atlas. When he had used them up and broke the ruler, he spit on his hands, caught Dick by the ears, and pounded his head against the map of Asia. Then he pulled two handfuls of hair out of his head, and sent him to sit down by the window with the broken pain where the snow was coming in.

"I could hardly believe my eyes. I asked one of the boys what was the meaning of this, an' if it wasn't some mistake.

"'No, no,' says he 'this is regular every day. The master whales Corkey eight or ten times a day now, an' yesterday he hit him with the English language (unabridged) on the head until the jar loosened the fillin' in his teeth. Didn't you know that the schoolmaster had married his sister?'—Texas Siftings.

Speculating Women.

A Wall Street broker remarked the other day: "Women are the most reckless gamblers in the world. I never yet knew one to come out ahead speculating in Wall street, for they never know when to let go. As speculators, however, they have ten times the nerve of men and they stand their losses with extraordinary fortitude. A striking instance of the hold which gambling gains on any one occurred the other day. A woman came into my office about one o'clock in the afternoon and asked to see me on a matter of importance. I went out to her and found she had traveled all the way down from Springfield, Mass., for the purpose of investing some money. She took a bank book out of her bosom and showed me that she had a deposit of four thousand dollars. While I was talking to her it occurred to me several times that her face was familiar, but I found that it was impossible to place her. Finally I asked her and she seemed greatly surprised that I had forgotten. She recalled the fact that she came to my office nearly twelve years ago with two thousand dollars and began to speculate. She had made ten thousand dollars within two weeks and then suddenly got caught in a flurry and was completely wiped out. She lost every cent that she had. She went back to Springfield and here she is again ready to blow in the rest of her savings. During all these twelve years she saved the money carefully, and every day she has read the stock reports in the newspapers. She has followed the market carefully and her ideas are sound enough on stocks, but there is no chance of her winning. Four thousand dollars won't go far when you speculate with it in big lumps, and the least little turn of the market is likely to send her back to Springfield penniless. This case reminds we of another one I had about a year ago. I was going out of the office about four o'clock in the afternoon on my way home, when I became aware that there was a woman sitting in one of the office chairs staring blankly out of the window. I remembered that she had been there for two or three hours, and made some inquiries. I found that she was a boarding house keeper up town, and a very estimable and deserving woman. She had by hard work succeeding in saving one thousand six hundred dollars and had listened to the persuasions of one of her boarders, a young stock clerk, and had come down to my office and speculated. The money that she had been years scraping together was lost in a day. I almost made up my mind never to operate for a woman again. But what's the use? If I don't do it some one else will, and the 'commish' goes as well with me as any one. At least I think so.—Brooklyn Eagle.

—A Boston lawyer has rooms in a building on a corner. His professional card gives the number on the main street, and if you call in the daytime you find him in a law office. His private card gives the side street number of the same building, and if you call in the evening you go up a different stairway to the identical same room, but it is now a bachelor's parlor. The furniture is specially adapted to the transformation. The desk becomes a sideboard, a lounge is covered with a luxurious leopard skin, and handsome hangings are disclosed.—Boston Journal.

Turkish Enterprise.

The foreigners in Constantinople are much amused at the latest exhibition of Turkish enterprise. The pride of the Turkish Government has been hurt by the necessity the European residents have been under, owing to the total inefficiency of the postal service, to have their own post-offices and mail carriage. The French, English, German and other post-offices have long served their nationalities, and their mails have been dispatched on foreign steamers. The Turkish Government determined to end this state of things, and, having organized its post-office department, announced that on August 1st it would close the foreign post-offices in the city. The foreign ambassadors remarked that the abolition of a long-established privilege required a negotiation, and meantime they would not permit any hindrance in the way of the transit of the mails to Europe. The Government did not close the offices, but set it out to show how useless foreign post-offices and foreign mail boats were in Turkish territory. It announced that on August 1st the Turkish mails to Europe would go by a Turkish steamer to Varna to meet the lightning express to Vienna.

The foreigners looked with some amazement and incredulity at this exhibition of Turkish enterprise. The mail train from Varna leaves at six a. m. every Sunday and Wednesday; the distance from Constantinople to Varna is one hundred and forty miles: the mail steamer leaves Constantinople at three p. m. on the previous day, thus having fifteen hours in which to make the connection. This time has been easily made. The Turkish steamer which set out with such a loud proclamation arrived at Varna four hours [illegible] authorities telegraphed to [illegible] mails sent on by special tra[illegible] garded the matter as "arrang[illegible] train ran as far as Bucharest. [illegible] there the agent discovered that there were only accommodation trains to Vienna, and consequently the mails arrived thirty-six hours late. The next mail day the Turks tried again with another steamer. It reached Varna six hours behind time. Again a special train was chartered to reach the Bucharest accommodation trains; but as this sudden demand for transportation to Varna absorbed all the postal facilities, the Asiatic mail for that week was suppressed. It was hoped that the foreigners would not notice this. A grave consultation was held by the authorities, and it was determined to sacrifice everything to make the Varna connection. To avoid the swift current of the Bosphorus the mail steamer was left at the Black Sea entrance and a swift steam launch was dispatched to her with the mail an hour before the usual hour. This change of hour discomfited the post-office. By charging a cent less postage than the foreign offices it had built up quite a business in letters for Europe, but on this day all the customers of the Turkish office took their letters to the other offices which were open an hour later. It was said that the Turkish sacks contained only seven letters; but with these seven letters the steamer started, missed the train at Varna, and the letters were forwarded by special train as before. By this time the whole population of Varna was in the joke and jeered and guyed the Turks when they landed.

On the fourth trial the Post-Office Department had to face the task of reaching Varna in the face of an amused and ridiculing world. This time the steamer did better: it only missed the train by about an hour. On the fifth trial the Turks determined to win: they closed the Constantinople mails two hours before the usual time, and at last did catch the train. In fact, the Turkish mail, with its empty bags, reached Varna only half an hour after the Austrian steamer which had left Constantinople three hours after the Turkish mail closed. The Turks, however, determined to persevere, and they capped the climax of absurdity by announcing that they would receive letters as late as the foreign offices and would send a supplementary mail by the Austrian steamer which runs in competition with their own slow line. Nothing more is heard of closing the foreign post-offices.—Cor. N. Y. Tribune.

Is "Choused" Slang?

There's an old bit of history wrapped up in that word "choused," as there so often is in our rich English speech.

You all know how alive England was in the reign of Elizabeth with the spirit of adventure and discovery. The finding of America was still a new wonder to be gossiped about. There were wars and expeditions on every side; and every plucky young Englishman wished to sail away to find a new inheritance with his ship, or conquer an old one with his sword. A great many young fellows, with more ambition than money, offered their services to foreign powers. One of these soldiers of fortune, Sir Robert Shirley, was employed by the Grand Seigneur and King of Persia, and sent on various missions, the most important being a commercial embassy to England. By this time King James was on the throne, and anxious to encourage the trade with Turkey and the East, which Elizabeth's advisers had begun in a small way, about twenty-five years before. So this shrewd Sir Robert sent over a Turkish chiaus, or envoy, in advance of his own coming, to get the good will of the London merchants in the Persian and Turkish trade. The enterprising chiaus exerted himself so successfully that he pocketed some four thousand pounds of their money (a large sum for that time), and ran away with it, leaving his master to stand the loss and the laugh against him, as best he could; for the tavern wits were as much delighted to get hold of a bit of new slang as you are, children, and they adopted "chiaused" (now become "choused") in the sense of "defrauded," just as you boys would now say "chiseled." I suppose. You will find it in Ben Jonson and in Shirley as slang, and in Landor, two hundred years afterward, as good English. So you see, in the etymology of one little word you get a glimpse of English life in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries.—Gilbert Rankle in St. Nicholas.

—Boston is considering the feasibility of a one-rail elevated railway that will make a hundred miles an hour easy traveling.—Boston Post.

WARREN LELAND,

whom everybody knows as the successful manager of the Largest Hotel Enterprises

of America, says that while a passenger from New York on board a ship going around Cape Horn in the early days of emigration to California, he learned that one of the officers of the vessel had cured himself, during the voyage, of an obstinate disease by the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Since then Mr. LELAND has recommended AYER'S SARSAPARILLA in many similar cases, and he has never yet heard of its failure to effect a radical cure.

Some years ago one of Mr. LELAND'S farm laborers bruised his leg. Owing to the bad state of his blood, an ugly scrofulous swelling or lump appeared on the injured limb. Horrible itching of the skin, with burning and darting pains through the lump, made life almost intolerable. The leg became enormously enlarged, and running ulcers formed, discharging great quantities of extremely offensive matter. No treatment was of any avail until the man, by Mr. LELAND'S direction, was supplied with AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, which allayed the pain and irritation, healed the sores, removed the swelling, and completely restored the limb to use.

Mr. LELAND has personally used

for Rheumatism, with entire success; and, after careful observation, declares that, in his belief, there is no medicine in the world equal to it for the cure of Liver Disorders, Gout, the effects of high living, Salt Rheum, Sores, Eruptions, and all the various forms of blood diseases.

We have Mr. LELAND'S permission to invite all who may desire further evidence in regard to the extraordinary curative powers of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA to see him personally either at his mammoth Ocean Hotel, Long Branch, or at the popular Leland Hotel, Broadway, 27th and 28th Streets, New York.

Mr. LELAND'S extensive knowledge of the good done by this unequalled eradicator of blood poisons enables him to give inquirers much valuable information.

Danger from Catarrh

That exceedingly disagreeable and very prevalent disease, catarrh, is caused by scrofulous taint in the blood. Hood's Sarsaparilla, by its powerful purifying and vitalizing action upon the blood, speedily removes the cause, and thus effects a radical and permanent cure of catarrh. Those who suffer from its varied symptoms—uncomfortable flow from the nose, offensive breath, ringing and bursting noises in the ears, swelling of the soft parts of the throat, nervous prostration, etc.—should take Hood's Sarsaparilla and be cured.

Serious consequences are liable to ensue if catarrh is not attended to in season. The disease frequently destroys the sense of smell and often developes into bronchitis or pulmonary consumption. Undoubtedly many cases of consumption originate in catarrh. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures catarrh and has even effected remarkable cures of consumption itself, in its early stages. A book containing statements of many cures by Hood's Sarsaparilla, will be sent free to all who send address to C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

The Best Medicine

"I have suffered with catarrh in my head for years, and paid out hundreds of dollars for medicines, but have heretofore received only temporary relief. I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla and now my catarrh is nearly cured, the weakness of my body is all gone, my appetite is good—in fact, I feel like another person. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best medicine I have ever taken." MRS. A. CUNNINGHAM, Providence, R. I.

Catarrh and Impure Blood

"Hood's Sarsaparilla has helped me more for catarrh and impure blood than anything else I ever used." A. BALL, Syracuse, N. Y.

"I suffered three years with catarrh, and my general health was poor in consequence. When I took Hood's Sarsaparilla I found I had the right remedy. The catarrh is yielding, as Hood's Sarsaparilla is cleansing my blood, and the general tone of my system is improving." FRANK WASHBURN, Rochester, N. Y.

OUR COAST DEFENSES.

Chief Engineer Newton Wants an Appropriation for Our Sea Coast and Lake Frontier Defenses.

The Commission Appointed to Visit Mexico and Central and South American States in the Interest of Commerce will Leave Soon.

OUR COAST DEFENSES.

WASHINGTON, November 4.—General John Newton, Chief of Engineers, in his annual report to the Secretary of War, says that the sea coast and lake frontier defenses should, if possible, be not less than seven miles distant from the parts defended by them and supplemented by torpedos or submarine mines. What is needed, he says, is a sufficient sum for the purchase of torpedo boats, electric cables and apparatus for all the principal channels when needed. The general improvements of the present time, the report says, requires great improvement in our means of defense. With a proper system of submarine mines to detain the vessels of the enemy under the fire of land batteries, it is thought that with the addition of guns of heavy calibre, properly protected, our harbors can be made impregnable, and the failure to afford such protection, General Newton adds, involves a terrible responsibility. Continuing, he says the guns on shore should be as heavy as those carried by the hostile fleet and the armor of the forts should be much heavier than that of the vessel. The more unprotected batteries should be invulnerable to the fire of the fleet. Iron turrets for the heaviest guns, iron casements for the second class, and barbette or disappearing carriages for the lighter guns and rifled mortar batteries, would constitute the defense of principal harbors. The best gun is of steel bound with steel wire, and is built upon true scientific principles and will not be subject to great improvement in the near future. Thus supplied the fortifications will be in accordance with the most improved principles. It is well understood that modern warfare is sudden and decisive and compels the beaten parties to pay expenses.

A LENGTHY JOURNEY.

The Commission appointed at the last session of Congress to visit Mexico and the countries of Central and South America in the interest of the commerce of the United States, expect to leave New York on the 10th inst. for the City of Mexico. From there they will go to San Francisco where the business men of that city will be heard on the trade with southern countries. The Commission will then go to Guatemala, thence to San Salvador, thence to Honduras, thence to Nicaragua, thence to Costa Rica, thence across the Isthmus of Panama to Venezuela, thence to the United States of Columbia, thence to Ecuador, thence to Bolivia, Peru and Chili, thence across the Andes to Mendoza, thence to the ports of the Argentine Republic, and thence home by the way of the Brazilian ports. In the different countries visited business men and Government officials will be called upon to express their views relative to the improvement of trade with the United States, and the advisability of adopting treaties similar to the late Mexican treaty.

REQUIRED TO GIVE BAIL.

In the habeas corpus case of Charles W. Dempsey, the stationer, indicted here and in Boston on the charge of printing false vouchers, for supplies to the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, Judge Wylie yesterday rendered a decision requiring bail (which was furnished) for the appearance of the accused in Boston on the 10th inst.

SHIPMENT OF CARP.

The first carload of carp, shipped this season, left Washington last night. The crop this year is unusually abundant, and shipments will be made frequently from this time forward until the work closes in January. About 10,000 carps will constitute a shipment. The car will go to New York City, from there will be distributed through New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and New England. Some of the carp will also be sent to Canada.

The Deadly Revolver.

ZANESVILLE, O., November 4.—While Eddie Cobb, aged nine, and Albert Cerlow, aged seven, were playing at the home of the former's father, Engineer Cobb, of the steamer Mink, on Grant Street, yesterday afternoon, young Cobb espied a revolver lying on a shelf, and climbing on a chair he secured it, and the two began playing with it, each taking turns at putting it to the other's head and snapping the trigger. When it came young Cobb's turn he pulled the trigger, and a bullet entered young Cerlow's head above the right eye. The boy will die. Cobb had been playing with the revolver a few days ago, and the family believed the weapon empty. One chamber, however, happened to be loaded, and the above is the sad result.

Shipments From Saginaw.

EAST SAGINAW, November 4.—During the month of October there were moved by lake from the Saginaw River 100,530,000 feet of pine lumber, 21,583,000 shingles and 6,788,000 pieces of lath. From the opening of navigation to date there has been moved from the river 720,962,000 feet of pine lumber, 139,296,000 shingles and 49,497,000 lath. The lumber shipments exceed those of last year to date by 7,000,000 feet. Freights have advanced and vessels are obtaining $2.12½ to Buffalo and Tonawanda.

They Were Not Drowned.

DETROIT, November 4.—A Mackinac City dispatch says: The three carpenters reported drowned are alive. They left Bay City for New Orleans in a sail boat. The steamship Australasia towed their boat as far as the Manitous, where they were cast adrift. They landed at Callum's mill, six miles above here, where they sold their boat and tools and left by rail.

Ocean Steamer Burned.

NEW YORK, November 4.—Shortly after nine o'clock last night a fire broke out between decks on the steamer Ramon De Herrara, of the Havana line of steamships lying at pier 18, East River. The vessel was loaded with a general cargo and the loss is estimated at $10,000 which is partially covered by insurance.

Guiteau's Assailant Acquitted.

WASHINGTON, November 4.—Wm. Jones, indicted on November 25, 1881, for assault and battery with intent to kill Charles J. Guiteau on the 19th of the same month, was acquitted yesterday. The jury was out thirty minutes.

Maud S. Will Trot Thursday.

LEXINGTON, Ky., November 4.—Maud S. yesterday trotted a mile in 2:18¼, repeating it in 2:13¾. Her trial against her own record is now set down for Thursday.

Intelligent people have quit taking bitters and mineral poisons, have quit doctoring kidneys and liver, nerves and brain, have quit using Alcoholic poisons and narcotic nostrums, and now keep themselves and families in perfect health by occasionally using the perfect blood purifier and true strengthener of weak portions of the body, known far and wide as Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla. Any druggist will get it for you.

Artesian wells in New York City, show that the East river underflows the island. In the deep well lately sunk the water ebbs and flows with the tide.

Sufferers from nervousness, early decay, etc., if you value life, avoid advertising doctors and medicines that act on kidneys and liver. Be not deceived by the many bogus certificates of cures from paid or imaginary persons. If a weakness of the sexual system is the cause of your distress, Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla will strengthen the parts affected, stop the drain, quiet the nerves, produce dreamless slumber and allow you to regain perfect health. It has cured thousands, and will cure you, for, by purifying the blood and strengthening every weak portion of the body, it removes every symptom of distress.

It is stated that the American Tract Society's publications during the year ending with March last aggregated 73,566,000 pages, in addition to seven periodicals with a total circulation of 4,000,000.

THE GENERAL RESULT.

Several States have been so close and the returns so slow in coming in that everything was in doubt until this morning. But the last reports land by at least 3000 majority. Connecticut, New Jersey and Indiana have also gone for Cleveland beyond a doubt. The South is for Cleveland except Virginia, which is in doubt and claimed by both parties. Wisconsin is claimed by both parties. The table below gives the electoral vote for each ticket, giving Virginia to the Democrats and Wisconsin to the Republicans, where they will undoubtedly be found on the receipt of full returns. Cleveland can lose Virginia and still gain the election. If he carries Wisconsin he will be that much better off.

TEMPERANCE DEPARTMENT.

EDITED BY A COMMITTEE OF THE UNION PROHIBITION PARTY.

Motto:—No License for the Liquor Traffic in any form or for any price.

EXTENDS BEYOND THE ELECTION.

Rev. Washington Gladden whose contributions to the current literature of the day have given him an advanced position as a writer on religious and social questions closes a very able review of the Republican and Democratic candidates for President in the late election with these words. "But one of them will be elected," men say. Not by any help of mine, I answer. My duty to bear testimony against them both is as clear as the sunlight. I would gladly have voted for an Independent candidate. Since none has been offered me I shall vote for St. John. "But your vote will be thrown away." O fools and blind! Have you never heard that there is a God who loves righteousness and hates iniquity? Do you think that a man who votes against a flagrant wrong

There is a day after to-day, and the votes of the men who stand up for righteousness to-day will count in all the future of this country—count a hundred times more than the votes of those who stifle their conscience to serve their party.

Contributions for this department are almost a failure this week on account of the extra demand upon our time since the HERALD's last issue.

The votes cast for St. John Nov. 4th in the county, State and Nation show that the temperance workers have every reason to feel encouraged with the growth of the public sentiment in our favor. Continue your work by subscribing for temperance papers and sending for temperance literature to distribute among your friends.

DO THE RIGHT THING.

Common Sense Talk to Bilious People. Clear Testimony of a Witness.

ALBANY, N. Y.

Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

Dear Sir: About eight years ago I began to suffer from a liver difficulty. During the attacks I experienced severe pain, accompanied by what I cannot describe better than by calling it a drawing in sensation. The agony of it was almost beyond endurance. None of the usual medicines employed in such cases had any effect upon me. From time to time I was laid up and unable to attend to my business.

Finally Mr. Lloyd, a druggist of this city, suggested your Favorite Remedy as an excellent thing for the liver. I had not taken the whole of the first bottle before I found decided relief; the pain passed away, and to my delight I regained the power to enjoy and digest my food without the former distress. Nature seemed to be set going again. I cannot express my appreciation of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy than by telling you that since my personal knowledge of its virtues I have recommended it to a great many of my friends and acquaintances.

Yours, Truly, S. PEPSON.

222 Alexander Avenue.

Mr. Pepson is one of Albany's old and respected residents, and consents to the publication of the above letter.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly

THERE are three articles in the November number which render it one of the most interesting yet issued. "Money Panics," by Richard B. Kimball, L.L.D., traces the history of panics from that of 1866 in London, to that of May, 1884, in New York; and Charles Gayarre relates the particulars of "Washington's Surrender at Fort Necessity," in 1754—both articles are finely illustrated. The third feature is the commencement of a thrilling serial story by Mr. Garrett Walker, of New Orleans, entitled "The Death Mark." The author is blind and paralized, and yet with beautiful cheerfulness and energy supports himself upon his writings, which he dictates.

There are, also, the usual variety of choice reading matter in the 128 quarto pages, and the embellishments number over 100. This is unquestionably the cheapest magazine in existence—the price is only 25 cents a number, or $2.50 a year, post-paid. MRS. FRANK LESLIE, Publisher, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York.

THE TECUMSEH HERALD.

TECUMSEH, MICH., NOV. 6, 1884.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

The melancholy days have come.

Splendid weather to gather corn.

The cold water brigade fought nobly.

The Democrats had their war paint on.

The Butler vote did not meet expectations.

Capt. Romeyn is at home on a few days furlough.

Chas. Eldredge, of Dundee, was on our streets last Tuesday.

Sumner Collins, of Detroit, spent Sunday with Macon friends.

The wheelbarrow bets, as well as other bets, can be paid now.

Joe Turner voted in Milan and spent Tuesday afternoon in Tecumseh.

The Republicans fought heroically but they could not hold the fort.

Dan Seamen, of Franklin, is putting a new roof on his dwelling house.

Whitmore will be the next sheriff, and he will make a good one too.

A change of programme is announced by the Acme company for to-night.

Both political parties had big blowouts at Adrian on Monday evening.

Last Tuesday was a genuine old fashioned election day, rain and wind in plenty.

Salsbury ran like a thoroughbred, but he has been over the track before and knows how.

We are in hopes the clerk of the weather will do a little better by us now election is over.

B. L. Baxter came down from Lansing last Saturday and remained at home long enough to vote.

Dr. Howell "gets there" by a small majority, but Mr Holdridge made a fine run against heavy odds.

It seems to be a drawn battle in this county, but the Democrats and Nationals did a good day's work.

Don't fail to visit the Dime Museum at the Opera House to-night. An entertainment for ladies and children.

The Democrats of Lenawee County did nobly, although they would have been gratified if they had done better.

Kelly, Hoxie & Co., of Holloway, are having a good trade this fall, notwithstanding the complaint of dull times.

Dr. Begel, of Holloway, has a nice little drug store, and is becoming a fixture in that burg. He desires a good patronage.

When the democrats arose Tuesday and greeted a stormy morning, they put on their waterproofs and took courage. A rainy day is always a God-send for them.

James S. Gilman has moved his family to Holloway, where he has lately started a harness shop. He seems to be well satisfied with the business outlook there.

James Boyd, of Franklin, lost a valuable horse last Sunday. This is the second horse he has lost within three weeks, and it is a serious damage to him as it breaks up his team.

Col. and Mrs. Saviers, of St. Louis, Mich., were in town over Sunday, having been called here by the death of the Colonel's aged mother, who died last week upon the old farm in Franklin.

The Allen Brothers, of Cambridge, attended several fairs this fall with their trotting stock. Beside the home fairs, they have taken in those at Hillsdale and Wauseon, Ohio. They had a successful season, and added to the reputation of their horses.

Having business in Cambridge the other day, we stopped for dinner at Geo. Dunnis'. Found him and the family all at home and the old farm right side up with care. He had fine crops of wheat and corn this fall, and is fatting a large lot of hogs.

Dr. J. W. Keeny, one of the oldest residents of Franklin, died very suddenly last Sunday night. He was in Tecumseh Saturday apparently as well as usual, and attended a funeral in Franklin on Sunday. His death is supposed to have been caused by heart decease. The funeral was held yesterday afternoon.

The Acme Dime Comedy Company, which is filling a six day's engagement at the Opera House this week, is an excellent troupe and deserves the patronage of the public. It is not a mere novelty company, but a good strong theatrical troupe. Their plays are first class and are finely presented, and yet the admission is placed at a remarkbly low figure and they draw a crowd.

Adrian Record: Two supporters of the two leading parties were overheard last night in a vigorous dispute as to the merits of the different processions. Said one partisan: Why, it took us four hours to pass a certain point up here, jerking his thumb over his shoulder in the direction of the "hill." "Yes, I know it," said the other, "but that point was a gin mill or you would have passed it in ten minutes." His opponent subsided.

Milan now has a Union depot. The thing was accomplished last week.

The Saline Cornet Band will furnish music at the Skating Rink to-night.

Good sleighing in some parts of the northern end of the lower peninsula.

The quality of Winter apples is reported, not so good as in former years.

Buckwheat flour has put in an appearance and the scratching has began.

J. A. Wheeler of Canandaigua, N. Y., was the guest of H. M. Temple over Sunday.

The M. & O. company has just completed a depot, elevator and freight house at Augusta.

Lute Bates has purchased the dray business of Wm. Smallidge, and will hereafter hold himself in readiness to do your toteing.

Ed. Anglim, of Adrian has been made district deputy of the Knights of Pythias for the district comprising Lenawee, Hillsdale and Washtenaw divisions.

Henry Smith will not have to buy more than half the usual amount of fuel for the coming year. He has built a high board fence around his coal and wood yard.

There were quite a number of our leading merchants and their families at the dime museum last evening.—Change of programme to-night. It is a fifty cent show for ten cents.

Col. S. D. Curtis, of Washington D. C. arrived in town last Saturday. He came home to vote; his legal residence being in Clinton. Having exercised the right of an American citizen he will return to his official duties next Saturday.

There will be a social dance at Exelby's Hall, Britton, on Thursday evening, Nov. 27. Music by Dundee W. A. F. orchestra. John Britton and Joseph Mellon, floor managers. Henry Knowles and D. R. Wiggins are the proprietors, and the bill, including supper, is only $1.25.

Adrian Press: John Swift, of Clinton, enlisted some eight or ten years ago in the regular army. He was supposed to be dead, as no one had heard from him since. Last week, however he proved that the battle of life was to the Swift, in his case, and surprised a large number of acquaintances by appearing at his old home.

Everybody should make a careful examination of their stove pipes and chimneys and see that the joints are all tight, and partitions and floors through which the stove pipes pass are well protected from the fire. A fire upon the windy days of last week would have been very disastrous, and a great public and private calamity might be prevented by the exercise of a little individual care and prudence.

The Coldwater, Marshall & Mackinaw railway company has this week transferred the old road bed north from this city, consisting of eighty-seven miles, to the new Toledo, Marshall and Northern company, with the express understanding that the new road shall be built within a specified time. The new road will strike the F. & P. M. road at a point not yet decided upon. Operations, it is expected, will soon begin.

Adrian Record: Farmers predict an open winter because the husks on the corn are thin. Too thin! We've heard that before. The husks on the tramp are thin too, but that has been proved not to denote an open winter. Then we hear that the muskrats are utterly neglecting to build their houses. O, yes. They neglected to build their houses last winter, and we didn't buy much coal. The thermometer went to 40 below and coal up to $8 a ton. Could have got it for $6.75 early in the season except for the muskrats. Blast the "muskrats!"

Adrian Record: Saturday evening Mrs. Joseph Emery and daughter, Frankie, returned from Detroit over the Wabash, where they have been visiting for some time past, and repaired to the Lawrence house for tea, and immediately after supper departed for their rooms over Carey's dry goods store. They had not been home very long when Mrs. Howard Sickles called to spend the evening. About 10 P. M. Mr. Sickles arrived for the purpose of accompanying his wife home, and on entering the apartments Mr. S. found the rooms filled with gas, which had escaped from a square coal stove, and at once remarked that such a thing was very dangerous and hastened to raise the windows and open the doors for fresh air. After this was done it was found that all three ladies had become unconscious from the fumes of the escaped gas. Steps were at once taken for the restoration of the unfortunates. Everything was done that could be. Stimulants were freely used, and a messenger dispatched for Dr. Allen, who arrived a few minutes later, and in course of an hour or so they were out of danger. The ladies are to be congratulated on their recovery, for it is an undisputed fact that they had a very narrow escape from death. This goes to show that we cannot be too careful as regards the safety of our coal stoves at all times. Whole families have been known to be suffocated from coal gas in one night.

The grass is as green as in June.

Mrs. Lucy Williamson of Tecumseh visited in Brooklyn last week.

Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Coder of Norvell, made Tecumseh friends a short call yesterday.

Special meeting of Tecumseh Lodge No. 69, F. & A. M., Friday evening, Nov. 14th. Work in 3rd. degree.

James Lowry, Tecumseh's popular Grocer, has a new card in the HERALD this week, to which we invite attention.

Charley Cone, of the Adrian Press, came over to attend the democratic meeting on Thursday and remained two days with his friends.

The amount of money to be raised by tax next year for county and State purposes, is $103,000, which is $20,000 less than that for the present year.

Charley Arnold, who formerly resided in Tecumseh, won the gold-headed cane at the Catholic fair which was in progress at Adrian last week.

A chipmunk lied for lodging at the house of John Grey, in Clinton, and being accommodated he went away in the morning taking Mr. Grey's watch.

The county complete with Riga to hear from, gives Geddes a majority over Wood of about 100. The indications are that Geddes' majority will be just about one hundred.

Miss Manie Monaghan is at home a few days on a visit. She expects to go to Kansas City, Mo., in about two weeks and will probably spend the winter with her sister, Janie Monaghan.

Detroit Journal: It is to be hoped that when the polls close to-day whatever the result may be, the people will do away with an October election and the consequent corruption that disgraced Ohio.

John R. Clark will deliver his celebrated lecture "To and Fro in London" at Adrian Tuesday evening, Nov. 11th, South Haven, Thursday, Nov. 13th. Kalamazoo, Wednesday, Nov. 12th, and at Galesburgh, Friday, Nov. 14th.

Our citizens should not fail to attend the Acme Comedy Company's entertainments at the Opera House, every evening this week. They are good and well worthy of a liberal patronage. Matinee Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

The season of the year has arrived when the farmer who did not destroy the weeds can now look on and see the wind blow the seed over the farmer's land, who took great pains to see that no weeds escaped his notice. Is it right?

Advertisers will find it economy in the end, if instead of scattering handbills, they keep a standing advertisement in the newspapers. The bills are hastily looked over and soon destroyed, while the papers enter nearly every family each week, the advertisements thus being kept constantly before the public.

Mr. W. T. B. Schermerhorn, Jr., of Hudson, is a student at Oberlin college. Having been reared in a newspaper office he finds it impossible to refrain from the business; and he has, accordingly, commenced the publication of the "College Programme." The publication not only contains the regular programme of the college entertainments, but a nice assortment of literary refreshments as well.

A serious accident happened to Mr. Will Richardson, at the Springville cider mill. The heavy pressure of apples piled in the chamber caused the floor to break through, crushing Mr. Richardson, who happened to be beneath, breaking his right arm and dislocating the left shoulder. Dr. Vaughan was immediately called, who rendered the needed aid, and the patient is said to be quite comfortable considering the nature of his injuries.

Brooklyn Exponent:—The Silver Lake drain in Woodstock is destined to drain a very nice section of country and is intended to lower the lake about four feet. It will do a great deal of permanent good, enhancing the value of the land that it drains. The drain is being pushed rapidly to completion under the supervision of Jack McCourtie, one of the ablest drain commissioners in Jackson county; which taking into consideration the technicalities of the new law, implies a great deal, but Mr. M. is fully deserving of the compliment.

Adrian Press: Mr. Hannibal Osborn of Franklin, may not vote for Mosher for congress, but he will call Tom Mosher, of Springville, "papa" just the same, for Oct. 22d., he wedded Mr. Mosher's daughter, Miss Rachel, for whom he had waited, lo these seven years. It has been a mystery to us why some of those wide-awake young Cambridge chaps permitted Miss Rachel to go along life's pathway so long alone, but we are inclined to believe the lady had a word to say about it herself, or else Hannibal, like his great namesake of old, proved to be the great general destined to make the attack and compel a capitulation. Well, it makes but little difference for he finds a noble good wife with plenty of energy and no nonsense, and we congratulate both upon the result of their deliberations.

THE RESULT AT HOME.

The election in Tecumseh passed off quietly, although there was a large attendance at the polls during the entire day, and a very heavy vote was polled. The vote cast was 75, being the largest ever polled in the town since Clinton was set off into a separate township. We give below the exact vote on every candidate. The candidate first named is fusion, the second republican, and the third prohibition.

FARMERS CLUB.

Friday afternoon, October 24th, the farmer's social club met at the residence of Austin G. Hall, in the central part of Raisin. Although it was a cold raw day, there was a good attendance of members and quite a number of visiting farmers who seemed to feel quite an interest in the proceedings. After spending the usual time in visiting, the meeting was called to order by the President, and the Program was well carried out.

Mrs. Horton read a good selection entitled Imagination. Mrs. F. C. Rector read an essay which was well received, entitled Wonder Why Girls will Read, or, Love Lightens Labor. Mr. A. G. Hall read a selection, How to Cure a Sheep-killing Dog, which, (modus operandi) was very effective. As Mr. Richard was not present, the club was disappointed in not having an essay from his able pen. The discussion of the question, "The Feeding and care of Stock for Profit," was very able, and was participated in by nearly all the farmers present. Mr. E. L. Russell led the discussion. Said if it would pay to raise stock at all, thought it would pay the best to feed so as to keep growing from the time they were dropped until they were fully matured or were sold for the shambles. Thought mill-feed would pay well to feed milch cows in connection with corn-meal, as the meal is too heavy alone. Believe that the cost of raising cattle would approximate 10cts. per day from the time the calf was dropped until they were 2 or 3 years old.

Mr. F. C. Rector would feed so as to keep his cattle growing from the first until he wanted to fatten. Could not tell the best way of fattening for profit. Had tried the Western mode of feeding corn without husking, with good results. Had tied up 14 acres of corn this fall to feed his steers this winter. Said it was a great saving in labor, and thought he got just as good results. Fed his steers all they would eat up clean. Thought the best time to dispose of pigs was in March or April. Sold about half of his in the Spring of '82 at 4½cts. per lb. Sold the balance in the Fall at 7cts. Those sold in the Spring netted him the most clean cash.

Mr. R. B. Gillespie makes his calves gain 50lbs. per month from the time they are dropped until they are two years old, when he fattens them. Raises his calves on skimmed milk with cornmeal and oilmeal. Feeds the meal dry and as soon as he can get them to eat it. Converts all his coarse grain and feed into pork and beef. Thought he had often lost money by not selling his pigs in the Spring as usually they brought about one-third more at that time than in the Fall, which would more than offset what they would gain in weight.

Mr. Fisher can't afford to feed his grain whole. Thinks it a great mistake. Says we can't compete with the west the staple crop is corn, so we must economize in every way we can. Keeps his steers until three years old. Has no trouble in making them weigh 1600 lbs. Generally gets 6cts per lb. for such weights. Begins to think that sheep husbandry don't pay as they graze too close, especially in these dry summers.

Mr. Benedict thought the farmers would make the most profit by fitting for market at all times, so as to take advantage of the market any time they choose.

After partaking of a bountiful repast prepared by our generous hostess the club adjourned to meet again in three weeks, Nov. 14th, evening, at the residence of Mr. F. C. Rector.

AYER'S Cherry Pectoral.

No other complaints are so insidious in their attack as those affecting the throat and lungs: none so trifled with by the majority of sufferers. The ordinary cough or cold, resulting perhaps from a trifling or unconscious exposure, is often but the beginning of a fatal sickness. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL has well proven its efficacy in a forty years' fight with throat and lung diseases, and should be taken in all cases without delay.

A Terrible Cough Cured.

"In 1857 I took an severe cold, which affected my lungs. I had a terrible cough, and passed blood night and almost slept. Thought it was the end. I tried AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, which relieved my lungs, induced sleep, and afforded me the rest necessary for the recovery of my strength. By the continued use of the PECTORAL a permanent cure was effected. I am now 76 years old, have good health, and am satisfied your CHERRY PECTORAL saved me."

Croup.—A Mother's Tribute.

"While in the country last week my little boy became very ill, [illegible] croup; it seemed as if he would die in a few minutes. One of the family suggested the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, a bottle of which was always kept in the house. This was given, and all immediately was well. We thought it was the timely use of the PECTORAL that saved our child's life. Can you wonder at our gratitude? Sincerely yours,

MRS. EMMA CURNEY."

"I have used AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL in my family for several years, and do not hesitate to pronounce it the most effectual remedy for coughs and colds we have ever tried. A. G. CRANE."

Palestine, Texas, April 22, 1882.

No case of an affection of the throat or lungs exists which cannot be greatly relieved by the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and it will always cure when the disease is not already beyond the control of medicine.

Teaching a Calf to Drink.

Many a reader, man as well as boy, will recognize the truthfulness and enjoy the humor of the following description of experience in giving the calf its first lessons of how to drink properly. We take it from the Irish Farmers' Gazette: Those who have had the mournful experience know that there is nothing more trying to the temper than the operation of teaching a young calf to drink. The process is familiar to every man who has brought up a calf from infancy: You seize a pail of warm milk, go into the stable, catch the calf by the ears, back him into a corner and bestride his neck. The idiot rather likes this and while you are reaching for the pail he employs his time in slobbering the corner of your jacket. You discover what the blockhead is about and get [illegible] You have help'd. You feel that way, and let him have it. But the calf can't tell for the life of him why he has been struck, and he gives a sudden and unexpected "bounce." He believes he will go and stay on the other side of the stable, but he doesn't announce this beforehand. He starts on the impulse of the moment, and you can't tell just when he arrives there. You ride along with him a little way. But the laws of gravitation are always about the same. You keeps up with the calf for about a second, but your body doesn't. You slide over the calf, and your back kisses the floor. Your head is soaking in the pail of milk. When you get up you are mad—uncommonly so. Milk runs from your hair, and imprecations out of your mouth, and you solemnly declare that you will teach that calf to drink or break his neck. The calf doesn't know of this resolve, and he glares at you in a stupid fright across the stable. He was not aware that he was the cause of your downfall, and wonders ignorantly what is the matter. You don't try to explain it to him, but furiously catch him by the ears, look back over your shoulder at the milk pail, and back up toward it, dragging the calf after you. The calf is out of wind, and you haven't a particle of grace left in your heart. You are astride the calf's neck, and jamming the fingers of one hand into his mouth, you place the other on the back of his head and shove his nose into the pail, fully resolved to strangle him if he don't drink. The calf holds perfectly still—ominously so—and there is silence for the space of half a minute, at the end of which time the blockhead, who hasn't drank a drop, suddenly makes a splurge, knocks the pail over; you are again reduced to a horizontal from a perpendicular, and when you rise the excitement is intense. You have been soaked with milk, "slobbered" on, and hurt. Not a drop of milk has gone down the brute's throat, and there he stands glaring at you, ready to furnish you with another free ride wherever you want to go. With an affidavit you seize the pail, and hobble out of the pen, fully resolved to let the four-footed fool starve; and thus endeth the first lesson.

History of the Barber's Pole.

In the earlier days venesection was the chief resource of the expert called in to relieve the sick. So universal was blood-letting that he who lived by practising the arts of healing was called a "leech." The barber's shop furnished conveniences for practising blood-letting either by the lancet or the application of the leech, and the barber finally added this to the assumed duties of his profession. The appliances were a staff to support the arm, a cord to bind it, and a bowl to catch the flow of blood. These were usually displayed in front of the shop; the bandage being wound around the staff, the cord tied above it, and the metal bowl inverted on the top. After a while these were imitated by an artificial sign. A pole was at first fastened in the ground, wound with the bandage, and capped with the bowl. Then a painted strip of white was put on the pole in place of the linen, and a wooden cap of a metal color surmounted the solid staff. It was natural that the pole should be painted red not only to show the white stripe more plainly, but as suggestive of the use to be made of the bandage. The bowl became a ball, and the brass or pewter gave place to gold or silver-leaf. In some parts of the world the barber still retains his skill in venesection, but bleeding is now the rare exception in medical practice even in the heroic school for treating the sick. But where the barber is no longer a leech, the sign shorn of its significance, is still retained, and the stripes and gilt cap will mark the barber's pole we suppose to the end of time. Its use certainly antedates any complete historical record.—Journal of Commerce.

Too Many Farm Implements.

In the great Northwest, as hitherto in Kansas and Nebraska, the reckless purchase of farm machinery, and the failure to properly take care of it, is frequently noted. The new comer, because he can buy his reaper and other machines on credit, purchases freely, with the confident expectation that good crops will enable him to discharge his obligations; but if the crops are not so good, and he is unable to sell as much as he expected, he frequently gets in a close spot financially. Perhaps he has no building beyond a stable for his horses. Boards are expensive. He leaves his machinery in an open lot, with no cover, exposed to all the changing weather. It often results that he can not pay for his machinery, and, furthermore, it is much damaged sooner or later. Do not go to the Western prairies to farm, unless you have enough money to pay for some machinery, and enough money to construct a proper shelter for it, after the season is over. It is an oft recurring and painful sight, as one rides over the prairie, to see these farm implements lying around loose in every direction.—American Agriculturist.

—There was really nothing the matter with the young orator but nervousness; nevertheless, when he opened his speech by saying, "My fello fitizens, rumthing is sotten in the Den of Statemark," his friends led him off the platform, and next morning published a physician's certificate to the effect that he was suffering from an acute attack of malarial cerebration.—Burdette.

The careful and secret method of preparing Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry makes it superior to all other preparations. It is very pleasant to take.

FOUR POINTS Prepared by an entirely NEW METHOD. Composed of the PUREST MATERIALS. WILL NOT INJURE THE FABRIC. WILL CLEANSE WITHOUT RUBBING.

You can do a large washing without any rubbing, use the boiling process instead. You can save Time, Labor, Fuel, Soap and Clothing.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.

Cut up fine and dissolve one half bar in half gallon of hot water. Pour half this dissolved [illegible] a tub with just sufficient hot water to cover a boiler full of clothes. Then put the clothes [illegible], rubbing plenty of soap in the most soiled parts. Be sure that the [illegible] water is [illegible] soak the clothes half an hour; stir them occasionally so that they may get the full benefit of the hot suds; pour the remainder of the dissolved soap into the boiler, adding [illegible] Soap the first [illegible]

Do not crowd the boiler too full. The same boiling water may be used for further washing by adding a little soap to each boiler-full of clothes. Flannels and prints should not be boiled, only a little rubbing required after soaking. This soap will cleanse clothing as thoroughly as any other without the use of the boiler. We prefer and recommend the boiling process as in itself a cleansing process, saving labor, the wear of the wash-board, and being the best disinfectant known, it is easier to boil the dirt out than to rub it out. You can cleanse perfectly the finest fabric without injury; the finest point lace and lace curtains. Such point lace in hot suds made with this soap, press water out with the hands; boil from 5 minutes in clear suds made with this soap, rinse thoroughly, press carefully between clean folds of a towel, roll in a dry towel, and iron between pieces of old flannel. Soak curtains in the suds 15 minutes and boil 5 to 10 minutes, rinse, stretch on frame, or pin every scallop to carpet over a sheet to dry, no ironing required.

Be sure and ask for ELECTRIC-LIGHT SOAP, and take no other.

Sold by leading wholesale and retail grocers everywhere. Dealers may obtain our goods upon application to ELECTRIC SOAP MANUFACTURING CO., Indianapolis, Ind., and 26-28 South Water St., Chicago, Ill.

An Englishman's Night.

Mr. George Lansing, brother of Lord Bencove, came to America some time ago with a party of capitalists, and joined in an enterprise to purchase large tracts of pine lands in Arkansaw. Mr. Lansing, before he met any of the squatters, wrote many amusing letters home concerning them, for, being an Englishman, he imagined that he knew much of these people, and did not think that personal contact with them would extend the already broad territory of his knowledge. He knew a number of English lords, in which he always "wound the squatter up," but he is wiser now.

Several days ago he set out on an expedition to visit a tract of land lying among the hills in a part of the country which had not been viewed by the members of the company. It was suggested that Mr. Lansing should be accompanied by some one who knew the country, but he hooted at the idea, wise owl, and declared that a man who had held his own in the jungles of India, was eminently able to take care of himself anywhere in a bloody American State.

Leaving after Mr. Lansing had gained a rough and rainy populated district, he was overtaken by a rain storm. In vain he sought shelter. Darkness came on, and missing the road, which had narrowed down to a mere bridle-path, he wandered around in the woods, alternately choked by grape-vines and sawed by green-briars. The lurid lightning illustrated the sulphurous imprecations which he called down upon the American Government, and as he lost his hat and was struck on the forehead by his horse, who threw up his head to avoid a briar, he shook his damp hand at the blackness above, and in a loud oath, questioned the purity of our institutions. At last he saw a light glimmering faintly among the dripping trees and tangled underbrush. Slowly guiding his horse in the direction whence came the welcome gleam, he at last reached a low rail fence, surrounding a small log house. Mr. Lansing shouted.,

"Hello, yerself!" exclaimed a voice, as a man poked his head from the door.

"Who lives here?"

"I do."

"Of course. What is your name?"

"What's your name?"

"George Lansing. Does Simon Butt live here?"

"Not at present."

"Where does he live?"

"Don't know."

"Did he ever live here?"

"No."

"Then why do you say 'not at present?'"

"'Cause he don't live here at present."

"My friend, I am wet and—"

"Must 'uv been out in the rain?"

"Yes, I was in all of that heavy shower."

"No, yer wa'n't."

"I say I was."

"I say yer wa'n't." Some o' that shower fell here, an' I know yer wa'n't here when it fell. Good night," closing the door.

"Say, there!" called the Englishman.

"Wall?" opening the door.

"I sa I am wet and—"

"Must 'uv been out in the rain."

"And I'm hungry."

"Didn't had nuthin' to eat, mebby."

"I'd like to stay here until morning."

"All right, help yerself," closing the door.

"Hello, there!" cried the Englishman.

"Hello, yerself!" again opening the door.

"Look here, my good fellow."

"One o' the best fellers yer ever seed."

"Glad to hear it. I am wet—"

"Must 'uv been out in the rain."

"I don't want any of your blasted foolishness, you know. I want to come in."

"All right, never said yer couldn't."

The floor of the little room seemed to be covered with children, and from a bed in a corner a head with long hair protruded. The squatter raked the chunks together—those people always keep a fire, winter and summer—and the cheerful blaze, shooting up the spacious "stack" chimney, invited the stranger to take off his coat and hold his steaming hands out to feel the warmth.

"How far is it to Simon Butt's?"

"Young Simon or old Simon?"

"Either one, I suppose."

"Wall, they live about a mile apart. Old Simon lives on one hill an' young Simon lives on t'other."

"But how far from here?"

"Yer know whar the spout spring is?"

"No."

"Wall, that's bad, fur it's the best water in the curmunity."

"Does Mr. Butt live near the spring?"

"Yo ho, old Simon?"

"Yes."

"Wall, he don't live as close to it as young Simon does."

"How can I find the spring?"

"By goin' to young Simon's."

"But how can I find young Simon's?"

"By goin' to the spring."

"See here, old man, I have fooled with you long enough."

"Thank the Lord," said the squatter's wife, nervously jerking her tangled hair. "Wish yer would git through with yer transaushun an' let a body git some sleep. Tildy, if yer don't keep them hoofs still I'll make yer think yer air pizened."

"Can I lie down here on the floor and sleep?"

"Don't know, podner. Yer oughter know what ye ken do."

"May I, then?"

"Yes, yer may, then or now; it makes no difference."

The Englishman was soon asleep. Early in the morning he was awakened by a "splutter" of hot grease from the frying-pan.

"If yer don't want ter git burnt, git 'round," said the old lady. He stirred around, and soon discovered that he was only a few hundred yards from his destination.

"Why didn't you tell me it was so near?" exclaimed Mr. Lansing.

"Why didn't yer ax?" replied the squatter. "Yer kep' on wantin' ter know how far it was but didn't ax how near. Sich is life. Ye oughter learn how to talk fore yer leave home. Wall, yer good mornin'."—Olive P. Read, in Drake's Magazine.

Sir Christopher Wren.

A painter may paint what he will; a sculptor may model what he will; a musician may compose and a poet may write whatever each sees to be best, but an architect can go no further than his clients will follow him. He may make drawings, indeed, but the drawing of an unexecuted building does not even show that it would have been possible to execute it—much less that it would have been satisfactory at all points within and without. Just as a painter's work is a picture, and no the mere outline for a picture; just as a sculptor's work is a statue, and not the mere sketch on paper for a statue; so, but even more thoroughly and emphatically, an architect's work is a building, and not the mere plan or view of a building. His productions, then, it is always in the power of others to influence to an extent beyond that to which the productions of most other artists can be subjected, and the fact will have its weight in any criticism of architecture that means to be fair and just. It is easy to illustrate this from Wren's own practice. Nothing in his parish churches, perhaps, impresses common observers more unpleasantly than the pewing. The worshipers are boxed up in rooms within a room; the height and heaviness and discomfort of the pews are proverbial, and for all these things Wren popularly gets the blame. Yet he is so far from deserving it, that he records his earnest wish to have had benches instead of pews; "but," he says, "there is no stemming the tide of profit, nor the advantage of the pew keepers." We see in Wren, then, a designer of the modern period who was yet a true artist; a man who mastered his style, instead of being mastered by it—to whom it was always a means and never an end. We have seen in him a so-called classicist whose deepest thoughts were all non-classic, whose towers are full of Gothic spirit, and his plans of Eastern inventiveness. We have seen in him an architect deprived of nearly all aids to architecture, yet victorious, and a church builder to whom precedent was nothing and novelty nothing, but reasonableness, expressiveness, and beauty everything. Such was his work; what were his wages? Eng and treated Wren much as she treated Milton, and the price paid for St. Paul's is only worthy to be named with that for "Paradise Lost." The pamphleteers reviled him from their garrets; the great Sir Vistos of the period, who had dabbled in building and thought themselves better architects than Wren by at least £30,000 a year, maligned him when living and perhaps slandered him when dead. The salary he received would by itself hardly have kept him alive to do his work, and half of it was stopped for years by act of Parliament, "thereby to encourage him," so the clause run, "to finish the same with the utmost diligence and expedition." It is the sort of encouragement which in this country artists of all kinds have frequently met with, but Wren's achievements had been so great that it was ultimately felt he deserved something more. He was therefore turned out of the Crown Surveyorship, after more than fifty years' service, without pension or thanks, and his appointment given to one Benson, who is deservedly immortalized in the "Dunciad."—Contemporary Review.

Mechanics in Education.

Seeing and feeling are two senses which are more important in aiding to a knowledge of our surroundings than any others, and yet their education is generally neglected until the possessor begins to learn something of mechanics. By mechanics in this connection is intended any attempt to contrive, put together, manufacture or change by manipulation, so that a woman who contrives and fashions a dress out of the unformed and plain material may be a mechanic. The use of mechanical tools cannot be begun too early in life, whether the pupil is to be a practical mechanic or to follow some other calling—there are few vocations that do not demand for success some practical knowledge of mechanics. "The whittling Yankees" possibly owe much of their undisputed position as inventors and good mechanics to the habit of using a pocket knife. A very prominent inventor and superior mechanic recently remarked that the best of his taste as a mechanic was undoubtedly given by his schoolmaster, who was a carpenter and joiner, and who worked at his trade in summer and taught the district school in winter. If a boy did not possess a foot rule, he made one for him from a shingle, or constructed an inch scale. The foot rule and a pocket knife he considered necessary to a school-boy's outfit, and he encouraged his pupils to estimate dimensions by the eye and then verify them by measurement. Wind wheels and water mills were parts of the pedagogue's training, and the click-clack of the one or the other could be heard all about the school house and on the borders of the brook in an adjoining field. Vanes cut from pine boards, toy ships, bird houses, bows and arrows, pudding sticks, and most of the toys used by boys forty years ago were made by the schoolmaster's boys under his direction. To day, besides the prolific inventor named, there are one superintendent of a railroad company, one bridge builder, one Superintendent of a large manufactory, and two architects to be counted from memory who probably received their bent for mechanics from the carpenter schoolmaster.

All these lead lives of usefulness as they are producers, adding to the wealth and comfort of the country and the people; and nothing in their observation education makes them less valuable as members of society. One of our most distinguished pulpit orators was a blacksmith, and many men who are noted for their eminence in literature, divinity, law, medicine, and as educators have had a mechanical training.—Scientific American.

Small Pox and Vaccination.

A writer on vaccination says, "Small-pox and varioloid could be entirely driven from the face of the earth by vaccination and revaccination and re-revaccination at proper times. It is a well settled principle in pathology that two diseases cannot exist in the same [illegible] so, it is admitted that a milder form of a disease will prevent or modify a severer type of a disease of a similar nature.

As an example, a child who has had "simple scarlet fever, or measles, seldom, if ever, afterwards has "malignant scarlet fever," unless, it may be, in some cases where some disease of another character may have eradicated the effect of impression made upon the system by simple scarlet fever, and always prevents small-pox proper. The contagion of small-pox is conveyed from victim to victim across street and from house to house, by the air, and is also conveyed by bed-clothing and wearing apparel of small-pox patients, and by letters written by an affected hand, and in so many ways that it seems almost impossible for the unvaccinated to escape. Persons who have never been vaccinated are liable to take small-pox from small-pox, and from varioloid. Persons who have been vaccinated are liable to take varioloid only from exposure to small-pox, but will not take varioloid from varioloid."

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED

STOMACH BITTERS

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is a fine blood depurent, a rational cathartic, and a superb anti-bilious specific. It rallies the failing energies of the debilitated, & checks premature decay. Fever and ague, bilious remittant, dyspepsia and bowel complaints are among the evils which it entirely removes. In tropical countries where the liver and bowels are organs most unfavorably affected by the combined influence of climate, diet and water, it is a very necessary safeguard. For sale by all Druggists and dealers generally.

MABLEY'S

GLORIOUS SUCCESS.

The unparalleled run on Mabley's Bankrupt Bargains the past week has set the town a talking; certain merchants are green with envy at our bustling, rushing business and wonder why they can't get a share of it. They say it is a shame that we should cut down prices so low that they cannot make a living. We are only exercising a privilege this glorious Republic extends to all—that is, conducting our own business after our own methods.

OUR BANKRUPT BARGAINS

Were purchased from large wholesale firms in the east, who recently failed. Mr. Mabley bought them from 40 to 60 Cents on the Dollar—that is on the original cost of manufacture, so you can see we can sell them lower than other houses own their goods for and yet make a satisfactory profit. Instead of merchants complaining about us they should thank us, for we bring trade here from every county in the district, from all over the state, and as we cannot possibly wait upon them all we afford grumbling merchants a chance of catching those we hav'nt time to wait upon. If they would mark their goods at a fair margin and work of sell more of them they might in time gain some recognition from the people.

We Work for all we Get,

And give the people full value for their money.

We received 25 more large cases of those Bankrupt Goods last week, and this week we intend to offer greater "Drives" than ever. Last week we had a tremendous rush, the goods seemed to "walk away." Our sales were far ahead of the corresponding week of last year. We sold last week $5.400, $5.400.

This is more than twice as much as any other clothing house in the city received.

We are well prepared for a similar rush this week. Below are a few specimen prices which we will guarantee full 20 per cent. below other dealers' cost prices. Remember these are Farmers are drawing tile from Easlick's tile yards. That's right. To insure an easy, early start and a good crop, all land designed for spring tillage should be tiled in the fall so when the frost goes out, the ground will be left warm dry and mellow.

"Les" Osgood says, that the proper way to underdrain heavy soil is two feet deep and two rods apart, and the larger the tile the better so as to insure a free circulation and good fertalization.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

Fine weather for fall work.

Mr. Converse, the releaving agent on the M. & O., took the election returns here on election night.

The Democrats at Britton had a jollification on Saturday night.

You will remember that Geo. D. Arner said at the time of Blaine's nomination that "James G. Blaine would not be the next President." We wonder if he is a prophet or a son of one.

The village is quiet, waiting for the returns of the canvass in N. Y.

Our friend, Mr. D. Harrison, was so overcome with joy on hearing of Cleveland's election, that when he went to feed his pigs he did not realize the pail was empty until he got to the pen.

The members of the Union Club, and all others interested, will meet at Mr. Lyman Hause's on next Saturday night, to reorganize and talk the future working of the club.

Mrs. G. W. Jackson and Mrs. Dr. D. W. Loree made Mrs. Alfred Lucking of Detroit, a visit Wednesday and Thursday of last week.

Mr. John Houseman and wife arrived Friday night and are buisy settling in their new home.

Those that attend the rink at Britton's all take a tumble.

Mrs. Hannah Wilson of Clinton is making her son, William Wilson, a visit this week.

Martin Palmer, Misses Ada Loree, Kittie Clark and Ida Arner attended Miss Anderson's musical class rehearsal at Tecumseh on last Thursday night.

Agent Frank Allen of Jerome, spent the Sabbath at home and at Miss R—.

Eddie Helm is quite sick again.

Weddie Bush returned from his visit to Dixon, Ill., Tuesday night.

The church social will be held at the home of Rev. W. J. Clark on this week Friday night.

Mr. Arnold of Norwalk, O., is here working up a singing class. He will teach a school of 20 nights for $80.00. He will meet all who wish a class on next Monday evening in the lecture room of the church.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

Election returns assume the shape of noise, and whenever the telegraph brings hope to either party, it is invariably connected with a hurrah, and not unfrequently with something to make it.

[illegible] proved opportunities, by expounders of adverse doctrines, and though singularly free from personal sarcasm, but little instruction was given about the causes of difference, except by Mr. Pennington. As all have done their best to achieve success, the race should not be spoiled by enjoying winners. Nothing is said here of the Peoples' party or Prohibition. Have they gone to China, dropped out, or got swallowed in the vortex of oblivion? They were, yet seem not, at least in the first flush of victory no one stops to count the Butler mousetraps.

There is one President none can count out, and he has summoned Mr. William Ide to his cabinet.

Doctor Palmer has been dangerously sick but is again on the street.

A great skating rink is growing on the avenue. It is large enough for any amount of suicide, and if nothing should happen before its completion there will after.

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

The Democrats of this place and vicinity gave vent to their feelings rejoicing over the result of the election in a grand jollification on Saturday night last in this place. Our streets were enlivened with a grand torchlight and music and a jolly good time was had with their new brooms.

Rev. E. W. Miller preached his farewell sermon to the Congregational church on Sunday last. He goes from here to Big Rapids, this state.

The two most notable events happening since our last batch to you was the death of Mrs. Aaron Bruce and of Mrs. Parks. Mrs. Bruce has been a confirmed invalid for the last twenty years. She died on Friday night of last week and her funeral was held at her late residence on Sunday afternoon, Rev. Osborn of the Baptist church officiating. Mrs. Parks who died on Sunday evening at the residence of J. S. Kies, her son-in law, was one of the pioneers of Clinton as well as one of the oldest ladies of Clinton being as we learn nearly ninety years of age at the time of her death. Her funeral was held at her last place of residence on Tuesday of this week at 2 o'clock P. M. Rev. E. W. Miller of the Congregational church (of which she was a member) officiating.

The Convocation of the Episcopal church here was very well attended by the people who report the presence of quite a number of visiting brethren from different parts of the state. The proceedings throughout were instructive and impressive and no doubt much good has been done.

The St. John's church social will be held on Friday evening of next week at the residence of S. Brown. All are invited. Provision ample will be provided for all who may come. We understand Mr. Brown says "where the spirit of the Lord is, there is and will be liberty." So come all.

Our skating rink does not seem to be the bonanza its founders had expected; however no one hurt and as we judge not much money made yet. Hope they will do better when the weather gets cooler. Sam is a good skater.

Mrs. W. C. Rogers who has been very sick is convalesing and is now very much improved in health and is still improving.

Our enterprising citizen Ed. J. Semark is progressing finely with his new house, which already makes a fine appearance.

Both political parties are settling down to the conclusion that there is to be a change in the administration and speculations are rife as to who will be Post-Master.

The ditch business is getting to be quite a mania and from appearances will soon become chronic. Our drain commissioner (Bruce) is petitioned almost daily to lay out and cause to be constructed a ditch in almost every man's back yard in the eastern part of our township (Clinton). We are sorry to say that we think Commission Bruce in his efforts to find an outlet for the surplus water gets muddled so he is rather flighty to do business.

TIPTON TOPICS.

Farmers are taking advantage of the splendid weather by turning over the sward for crops next spring. This summer can scarcely be called a short one when such fine weather continues on through the Autumn months.

The great presidential conflict of 1884 is over, but whose name shall go down in history as chief magistrate of the Nation for the next four years is not yet definitely known.

A number of changes in real estate have lately occurred in Franklin. Hiram Learnard has sold his farm on the turnpike to Ezra Simmons, and the Learnard family will soon move to Southern Kansas. Thos. Gittus has bought the house and lot owned by Joseph White, and Mrs. Simmons has sold her property at Tipton to Mrs. Conlin.

Martin Whelan and family left Franklin on Monday last for Florida. The community will miss Mart's cheerful face and manner, and it was with evident regret they left their comfortable home, necessitated by the poor health of Mr. Whelan.

Frank Pitcher is buying poultry for F. Bumann.

George Knapp has rented his farm and will move to Tecumseh.

Editor Stearn's illustrated issue of last week was ludicrous in the extreme.

Last Friday the children and grandchildren of Andrew Wilson met at their residence. There were eleven children and thirteen grandchildren, all living within five miles of the old homestead. After partaking of a bountiful dinner Mr. Wilson was asked to open a suspicious looking box which contained an album with cabinet pictures of the children and friends. Mr. Wilson started for Florida on Tuesday last.

MACON MUSIC.

Miss Elva Richart closed her school in Bridgewater last week. She will teach the same school this winter.

Chas. Slaight, of Flint, has been engaged to teach the Darling school this winter.

Dr. Geo. Howell was re-elected to the Legislature. The first district of Lenawee will be well represented.

It looks now as though Grover Cleveland would be the next president. So mote it be. We can endure it four years.

Judge Mills preached at the Baptist church last Sunday. We understand that he has been engaged by this church and will hereafter preach once in two weeks.

No one seems to be more jubilant over the result of the election than the political prohibitionist. No one has reason to be more exultant. He accomplished, to a very great extent at least, the object he had in view, viz: to put the democracy in power. Now that the democrats have been quite generally successful, it behoves the political prohibitionist to stand by the democracy, and endeavor to keep it in power.

Auction Sale.

Hiram Learnard having sold his farm will sell at auction at his residence 4½ miles west of Tecumseh, on Tuesday, Nov. 18th, 1884, at 12 o'clock M. the following property: Four work horses, 2 road horses, 1 two year old heifer, 1 yearling heifer, sow with 8 pigs, breeding sow, 6 pigs, 50 bucks, 2 lumber wagons, 2 single buggies, 1 nearly new; land roller, grain drill, 2 wheel cultivators, spring tooth harrow, new corn sheller, cutter, 20 tons good hay, sleighs, plows, 100 bu. good seed corn, 400 bu. corn, 10 acres corn fodder, Royce reaper, household furniture, &c. Terms, 12 months credit with good notes at interest. Ben Reynolds, Auctioneer.

Adrian Record: Before election Miles Wheeler bet Col. Eldridge $50 that Ogden township would give Allen 130 more votes than it would give the Colonel. The returns from Ogden showed exactly 128 more for Allen than for Eldridge. The Times, however, printed the majority at 131. The party who brought the returns from Ogden said he knew where there were two mistakes and the vote would be recounted which would make Allens vote over Eldridge 130. The vote was recounted as threatened—an illegal proceeding by the way—and two votes, one for Allen and one for Eldridge, thrown out. This won the bet for Col. Eldridge.

The Adrian Democrats had a jollification meeting last Monday evening. A big crowd attended from Tecumseh.

TO HER WHO KNOWS.

Because your eyes are blue, your lips are red,
And the soft hair is golden on your head,
And your sweet smiling can make glad the day,
And on your cheek pink roses have their way,
Should I adore you?

Since other maids have shining golden hair,
As bright eyes as the blue sky roves wear,
And other lips can set the day alight,
And other eyes can smile with youth's delight,
Why now believe you?

But if the eyes are blue for me a one,
And if only for me the rose has blown,
And but for me the lips their sweet smile wear,
Then shall you wish me in your golden hair,
I will adore you.

And as my saint, my soul's one shining star
That hauls my darkness from its throne afar
As lights the summer moon the waking sea,
With all I am and all I strive to be,
I know I love you.

Louise Chandler Moulton, in Louisville Courier-Journal.

JIM'S LETTER TO FRED.

DEAR FRED: You have often laughed at me for being so romantic, but I don't mind telling everything to you. You will not betray me to the boys. I have had an adventure. I came down to the [illegible] weeks ago, and I fell in love the same morning. She was a very pretty young lady, with the loveliest eyes, the sweetest mouth, the finest, silkiest golden hair that could be dreamt of. She was walking on the piazza with her father—a portly old gentleman, with gray hair. He wore a big diamond in his shirt bosom and another on his little finger, and was dressed very elegantly altogether, from his [illegible] stockings. She was splendidly dressed, too. Evidently they were rich people. Her costumes were perfect, and she had a new one on every time I saw her, but she would have been lovely in a coffee-bag gown, such as poor plantation darkies wear sometimes. I confess that I followed her about. When she was alone she sometimes allowed me to see that she noticed me. She was quite aware of my admiration, I knew. Such sweet glances she used to give me from under her long, curled lashes were enough to turn a man's head who was as madly in love as I. But when the old gentleman was with her she never glanced my way.

He, I could see, like most rich fathers, objected to her receiving any attention from any one, or being acquainted with any young gentleman. Doubtless, I used to say to myself, he would at last induce her to marry some man as old as himself, disagreeable, obnoxious to her, but very rich. He would sell her as Circassian slaves are sold in market to the highest bidder. A poor clerk would have no chance. He would order him from his door.

You know my salary, Fred. I was hopeless.

Still, only to see her now and then was a great joy. I used to wander about the hotel like a ghost at all sorts of hours. I sent her a bouquet by a little waiter, alluding to her as the lady in pale blue, and he gave it to a Gorgon of a female dressed in the same color, by mistake, and that cost me more than I like to say, besides the quarter for his service and the agony of mind I endured.

I tried to get acquainted with the old gentleman, but he pretended not to hear the polite remarks I made about the weather as we met in the reading-room. I was afraid he saw my object.

In fact, there is very little to tell, except that I looked and fell in love, and after that took it out in looking from a distance.

You've said I was sentimental a thousand times, dear Fred, and you were right, I suppose, for all this time I had the strangest fancy in my mind. Imagine the boys in the office knowing of it! But you'll never tell, Fred.

I hoped that I might, some day, be of service to her, and be rewarded by a glance or a word. I hoped that I might even save her life, and so, perhaps have a right to claim it.

She drove in a pony phaeton. She swam like an angel or a mermaid. Sometimes I used to say to myself: Perhaps her ponies would grow restive and run away with her. I, always on the alert, would rush forward, seize the bridle and stop them at the risk of my own life, then would lead them home to the hotel.

The father would rise from his seat and hurry down the walk to meet us.

"My preserver! Thank him, papa!" the young lady would sob.

"How shall I reward you, sir?" he would exclaim.

"By permitting me to call occasionally," I would answer, etc., etc.

Or in the water, in her lovely white and violet bathing-dress, she would suddenly throw up her arms and cry for help. I would plunge into the water, bear her ashore in my arms, and, as I placed her in those of her father, he would ejaculate:

"Ask of me what you will, it is granted!"

And, of course, I would ask for her hand.

"Dreams: the foolish dreams of a love-sick boy!" I hear you say.

Prophetic dreams, Fred. One day it really happened.

No; I have not given my order for the wedding-cards yet, old fellow. What happened was this:

The bathers were in the water. She was there, in a new bathing-suit—cream and brown, with a silk cap to match. Her father, as I knew, read his newspaper on the porch. I stood on the beach. Out she went, gracefully and fearlessly. Suddenly she paused and uttered a shriek. All the other ladies uttered shrieks. I saw the bathing-master make toward her. I plunged in, only pausing to throw off my coat and kick off my shoes. I was beforehand with him. I caught her around the waist and struck for shore.

"Thanks awfully," she said, as we reached it. "I'm sorry I scared everybody; but the nastiest black fish flopped right in my face, and I just had to yell."

The language was not elegant, but the voice was sweet, and she was like a rose or a dove, or both.

Papa had come down to the shore. He was pale with fright, and had doubled the newspaper into a great wad in his excitement, and kept dabbing his bald head with it, under the impression that it was his handkerchief.

"Bless us and save us! I expected something dreadful would come of all this splashing about," he spluttered, as he advanced to meet us. "Patty, run in and put on your dry things, and don't go a swimming without me no more. Mr. Whatsitname, I'm greatly obligated to you, I'm sure. If there's anything I can do for you, just say—Good laws, she might have been drowded! Some said she was."

We shook hands.

"You've spilled your pants," he said, in a moment; "and your vest. Here, you go into our place when you go down to New York, and jest hand that in, and suit yourself, to a new pair. Don't say no. I'ain't is pants to any body. Your'n are a nice pair. My name is on the card."

I felt rather hurt, but I would not resent anything from her father.

I looked at the card. It bore the words: "Crump & Co., Clothiers."

"Mr. Crump," I said, and offered him my card, which he took, read through his eye-glass and pocketed.

"Hope you won't catch any cold, Mr. Holly," he said, "and thank you again for going in after my wife so prompt and ready. Mrs. Crump is jest as much obliged as I am."

"Mrs. Crump?" I faltered. "The lady in yellow?"

"Oh, yes," he said, good-naturedly. "She's jest a leetle younger than I am, you know. I think a wife had always ought to be. It's more suitabler than the other way. Don't forget them pants. There make it a whole suit, anything you like."

But I was not in a poetic mood by this time.

"Hang it, sir, do you mean to insult me?" I asked.

The old gentleman stared.

"If you don't want 'em don't take 'em," he said; "but pants is pants, and you've ruined yours swimming after Mrs. Crump. No offense meant, I'm sure."

"Good morning, sir," I said and walked away.

The illusion was over; the dream past. The father changed into a husband; my ideal one into Mrs. Crump, who could be nothing to me. Besides she was very ungrammatical.

I am coming home to-morrow. I really do not like the seaside.—N. Y. Ledger.

The Nochistongo Pass.

Some people think that the engineers of the Mexican Central traced their line through the Nochistongo Pass, merely obeying a professional pride that impelled them to overcome great difficulties. This pass is famous. It is a huge artificial canal made to drain the Mexican Valley and lead the waters of its salty Lake Texcoco to Lake Tula. It was cut by orders of the Marquis of Salinis, Louis de Velasco, Viceroy of Mexico, in 1608, and under the supervision of the Jesuit Juan Sanchez. It measures nine kilometers—nearly six miles. No curve of the road is less than two hundred meters in length, and the steepest declivity is less than four miles and about one and one-half per cent. in dip. The rails of the Central are steel, with a weight of twenty-seven kilograms per lineal meter. The cramp-irons are fastened with four bolts. The sleepers are oak, two meters and five hundred and fourteen millimeters in length. The ballast of the road is the limestone formation of the pass, that insures its stability. An accident or derailment there could scarcely occur on account of poor condition of rails or roadbed.

Washing away of tracks is amply guarded against by great culverts to lead off the water that may come down on the tracks, while the possibility of land slides is guarded against, as the center of gravity falls inside of the base sustaining the roadbed. Retaining walls occur where sufficient slope could not be given to the bank. The cliffs above the road where landslides were possible have been cut away till danger from that source has been nullified. Though the soil is loose and washes easily, conduits and culverts clear the tracks. The inclines of the banks above and below the track are forty-five degrees, and careful investigation shows them to be as substantial as granite walls. The Central Company also employs two watchmen, who are in the pass all the time, going back and forth.—Boston Transcript.

The Value of Slang.

Slang has this value, that it shows how language grows. The English tongue is so vigorous that it seizes whatever it needs for growth, just as it did in its infancy. At that period direct imitations of sounds were constantly made into words, as the young vandals of to-day use "chink" for "money." Farther on in the growth of the tongue it took from ordinary speech these imitative words, and converted them to new uses, just as you say "ticker" for "watch," and "pun" for "advertisement." The contraction of words is another stage, as "mob," now perfectly good English, was at first merely slang for the Latin mobile, the fickle crowd, as "cab" was slang for "cabriolet," and "furlong" for "furrow-long," the length of a furrow, and as "nob" is slang for "nobility."

We make words for men' snames in the same way. I suppose "boycotting" may be good English soon. "Martinet," now indispensable, was the name of a historic General over-strict in discipline. "Derrick" was a famous hangman of the seventeenth century, in honor of whom the roughs nicknamed the gallows-like hoisting apparatus, and these are two, only, out of scores of cases.

Many of the words that are now respectabilities of conversation were once gutter children. "Drag," for instance, was a thieves' word for carriage, and "dragsmen" the particular variety of thieves who followed the carriage to cut away the luggage from the rack behind. But "drag" is good English now for a private coach. "Kidnap" was thieves' slang for child-stealing, that is, to "nab a kid." "Tie," for cravat, was as much the slang of low life as "choker" is now. "Conundrum" and "donkey," and "fun" were all slang words, though perhaps not so low. "Bore" was slang and so were "waddle" and "bother."—Lucia Gilbert Runkle, in St. Nicholas.

OF GENERAL INTEREST.

—A stroke of lightning split open a hollow tree, at Shasta, Cal., revealing a skeleton and clearing up a murder mystery.

—A church spire in Norwich, Conn., was recently utilized by a pair of trapeze performers for an exhibition of their skill.

—A skeleton was recently found in Savannah, twenty-two feet underground, with a thirty-two-pound ball and chain encircling the bones.

—Miss Julia Wheeler killed a large rattlesnake in North Carolina. His snakeship's beautiful skin, made into a belt, now adorns Miss Julia's waist.

—Whalebone is becoming more valuable every year, and is now worth about four dollars and a half a pound. Were it not for the bone whale-fishing would no longer be profitable.

—A Newark (N. J.) paper tells of a witness who was called to identify a signature, and who testified that the subscriber could not write his name, "but believed the signature was his."

—The topography of the moon is well known to astronomers, and has been carefully outlined on detail maps. There are five mountains in the moon more than [illegible] in height, the highest measuring 28,975 feet.—Albany Journal.

—We may look for an extraordinary severe winter if there is any virtue in the Indian hornet sign. All the nests we have found this year in the woods are built on the ground. When they are suspended from trees and high up it is a sign for a mild winter. Our old prognosticators say they have never known this sign to fail.—Middlebury Post.

—Among the edible fishes collected in the waters about Charleston for the New Orleans Exposition, by the State Fish Commissioner of South Carolina, are the following: Amber fish, sailors' choice, croivale, sheepshead, croaker, skipjack, drum, snapper, chub, bream, black grunt, mullett, bass, salmon, trout and black fish.

—A convict of the Massachusetts State Prison, recently discharged, spent three years of his absence locked up behind the bars, within gunshot of his own house and none of his family knew it. Occasionally, from a window, the prisoner got a glimpse of his wife and three children, who mourned over him as lost. He had given an assumed name when arrested.—Boston Transcript.

—Thomas Hobson was the first man in England to let out hackney horses. He lived at Cambridge in the seventeenth century. When a man came for a horse he was led into the stable and shown the collection, but was obliged to take the horse which stood next to the stable door. Hence the expression "Hobson's choice" came to signify "this or none." Milton, in 1660, wrote two humorous poems on the death of the old liveryman.

—The etiquette of funerals in Mexico does not permit the female relations of deceased to attend. Only men attend the departed to the church and the tomb. Funerals are so expensive that they often ruin business men. All female relatives, even to cousins and children, must wear deep mourning for two years. During the mourning none of the ladies of the household must be seen in public. Bodies are buried encased in laces and decked with precious stones.

—In Mexico as in Spain and other southern countries, a lady retains her maiden name after marriage, and though she annexes to it that of her husband by means of a de, she is universally known by her own family name. It is considered more courteous to address even elderly married ladies Senorita (Miss), instead of Senora (madame.) The lady of the house is always called by her servants and dependants La Nina (the little girl), though she may have attained the age of eighty.

—There is a sunken forest of white cedar in New Jersey which has been mined for timber over seventy years. The industry of digging the sunken logs is carried on by the people of Dennisville, a village which was brought into existence through the buried wealth of lumber in its vicinity. Over the sunken forest trees of large size are growing, and in many instances these are cut away to reach the more valuable timber three or four feet below the surface. The sunken trees are of enormous size. Their age is a matter of curious conjecture. It is probable they were buried many centuries ago by the action of an earthquake.—New York Herald.

What Hurt Him.

He was so hopping mad about it that he had to swallow the lump in his throat three or four times before he could speak English. When the other had patted him on the back and led him around in a circle he began with:

"Of course, if I make a debt I expect to pay it."

"Of course."

"I'm worth thirty thousand dollars and I don't owe two hundred dollars in the world."

"Of course not."

"Well, I was sitting in the office about eleven o'clock this forenoon, when in came a stranger. He introduced himself and took a chair. I was smoking, and it was only courtesy to offer him a cigar. He said he had frequently heard my name mentioned, and I supposed he was some gentleman from the interior of the State who wanted my written legal opinion."

"Certainly; your luminous legal opinion."

"He seemed rather diffident and embarrassed, and as he had not made his wants known up to noon I invited him home with me to dinner. He readily accepted."

"I see."

"After dinner I showed him all over the house, played billiards with him for half an hour, and then brought him back to the office and gave him another fifteen cent cigar and asked him to come to the point."

"And he came?"

"He did—bless him! He handed me a bill of fifty cents from a tin shop here in town for mending the wash-boiler and putting a new nose on the tea-kettle!"

KING'S EVIL

Was the name formerly given to Scrofula because of a superstition that it could be cured by a king's touch. The world is wiser now, and knows that can only be cured by a thorough purification of the blood. If this be neglected, the disease perpetuates its taint through generation after generation. Among its earlier symptomatic developments are Eczema, Cutaneous Eruptions, Tumors, Boils, Carbuncles, Erysipelas, Purulent Ulcers, Nervous and Physical Collapse, etc. If allowed to continue, Rheumatism, Scrofulous Catarrh, Kidney and Liver Diseases, Tubercular Consumption, and various other dangerous or fatal maladies, are produced by it.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

Is the only powerful and always reliable blood-purifying medicine. It is so effectual an alterative that it eradicates from the system Hereditary Scrofula, and the kindred poisons of contagious diseases and mercury. At the same time it enriches and vitalizes the blood, restoring healthful action to the vital organs and rejuvenating the entire system. This great

Regenerative Medicine

Is composed of the genuine Honduras Sarsaparilla, with Yellow Dock, Stillingia, the Iodides of Potassium and Iron, and other ingredients of great potency, carefully and scientifically compounded. Its formula is generously known to the medical profession, and the best physicians constantly prescribe AYER'S SARSAPARILLA as an

Absolute Cure

For all diseases caused by the vitiation of the blood. It is concentrated to the highest practicable degree, far beyond any other preparation of which like effects are claimed, and is therefore the cheapest, as well as the best blood purifying medicine, in the world.

Catarrh Can be Cured

That exceedingly disagreeable and very prevalent disease, catarrh, is caused by scrofulous taint in the blood. Hood's Sarsaparilla, by its powerful purifying and vitalizing action upon the blood, speedily removes the cause, and thus effects a radical and permanent cure of catarrh. Those who suffer from its varied symptoms—uncomfortable flow from the nose, offensive breath, ringing and bursting noises in the ears, swelling of the soft parts of the throat, nervous prostration, etc.—should take Hood's Sarsaparilla and be cured.

Serious consequences are liable to ensue if catarrh is not attended to in season. The disease frequently destroys the sense of smell and often developes into bronchitis or pulmonary consumption. Undoubtedly many cases of consumption originate in catarrh. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures catarrh and has even effected remarkable cures of consumption itself, in its early stages. A book containing statements of many cures by Hood's Sarsaparilla, will be sent free to all who send address to C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

The Best Medicine

"I have suffered with catarrh in my head for years, and paid out hundreds of dollars for medicines, but have heretofore received only temporary relief. I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla and now my catarrh is nearly cured, the weakness of my body is all gone, my appetite is good—in fact, I feel like another person. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best medicine I have ever taken." MRS. A. CUNNINGHAM, Providence, R. I.

Catarrh and Impure Blood

"Hood's Sarsaparilla has helped me more for catarrh and impure blood than anything else I ever used." A. BALL, Syracuse, N. Y.

"I suffered three years with catarrh, and my general health was poor in consequence. When I took Hood's Sarsaparilla I found I had the right remedy. The catarrh is yielding, as Hood's Sarsaparilla is cleansing my blood, and the general tone of my system is improving." FRANK WASHBURN, Rochester, N. Y.

—A remedy, or rather a preventive, which at the time was much believed in, was to take during the day, either spread on bread and butter or in some other way, two spoonfuls of salt. This salt acted as a disinfectant, and it was asserted that no one who took regularly his two spoonfuls caught the cholera. I am surprised to hear nothing now of this salt specific.—London Truth.

—Dr. Clifford Allbutt thinks that specialism is now being carried so far in London as to lower the usefulness of the medical profession in general. He says, too, that the best specialists show much affectation in refusing to do regular professional work. "A young lady told me lately," says Dr. Allbutt, "that a London physician one hears very known as a lung doctor, but yet one under whom I would gladly place myself for an malady, said to her, having found her lungs to be really sound, he would name another physician who would care for her general health."

A Lake of Fire.

A correspondent of the New York Times, writing from Waterloo, an extensive estate in Nassau, describes a curious body of water to be seen there. The lake is nearly one thousand feet long and two hundred to three hundred feet broad. It is an artificial lake, the former proprietor of Waterloo having built it to store green turtles in. The plan was to buy the turtles alive and put them in the lake and let them increase in size and numbers, when they would always be ready to be caught and eaten. Millions of fish could be kept in the lake at the same time, and thus the occupant of Waterloo would always have a good dinner waiting in the yard. The lake's bed is cut out of the solid rock, and is only a few hundred feet from the ocean. It is connected with the sea by a small canal, also cut through the rock, and when the gate in this canal is left open the tide rises and falls in the lake.

It was one of the darkest nights I ever saw. We went into the boathouse and pushed out a heavy rowboat. I took the oars and we pulled off. The first stroke gave me a fine start. There had not been any unusual appearance of phosphorescence on the surface of the water more than is often seen on tropical seas; but as soon as the oars stirred it up they seemed to be dipped in melted gold. There was actually fire there, I was compelled to think. While I was wondering at it, a fish, startled by our splatter, darted across the pond near the surface, and in his trail was left a streak of yellow fire. Then we saw at different places on the surface little vapory clouds of fire flashing and darting about like the northern lights.

"If you have a newspaper in your pocket," said my companion, "lay it out on your lap and splash the water with both oars, to see whether you can get light enough to read by."

I did so, and was able to read the heading and all the large lines without difficulty. I took an oar then and splashed the water, and wherever a drop fell back into the lake was a round spot of fire. There was something startling in seeing so much fire floating about, and I had not the faintest notion where we were. I had gone out upon an unknown lake, in total darkness, and had no idea how large or how deep it was, nor where the current, if there was any, might carry us.

"If you will pull hard and watch the bow and stern of the boat, you will see something curious."

I did so, and was well paid for the exertion. When a boat moves fast there is always a cutting of the water at the bow and a little eddy left just behind the stern. That cutwater and that eddy were of flaming fire. More fish darted about, leaving fiery trails. Indeed, wherever the water was agitated it turned apparently into fire. When the agitation ceased the fire disappeared, except that there was always a little sparkling upon the surface. We

Intelligent people have quit taking bitters and mineral poisons, have quit doctoring kidneys and liver, nerves and brain, have quit using alcoholic poisons and narcotic nostrums, and now keep themselves and families in perfect health by occasionally using the perfect blood purifier and true strengthener of weak portions of the body, known far and wide as Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla. Any druggist will get it for you.

Arteslan wells in New York City show that the East river underflows the island. In the deep well lately sunk the water ebbs and flows with the tide.

Sufferers from nervousness, early decay, etc., if you value life, avoid advertising doctors and medicines that act on kidneys and liver. Be not deceived by the many bogus certificates of cures from paid or imaginary persons. If a weakness of the sexual system is the cause of your distress, Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla will strengthen the parts affected, stop the drain, quiet the nerves, produce dreamless slumber, and allow you to regain perfect health. It has cured thousands, and will cure you, for, by purifying the blood and strengthening every weak portion of the body, it removes every symptom of distress.

It is stated that the American Tract Society's publications during the year ending with March last aggregated 73,566,000 pages, in addition to seven periodicals with a total circulation of 4,000,000.

Common Sense Talk to Bilious People. Clear Testimony of a Witness.

ALBANY, N. Y.

Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

Dear Sir: About eight years ago I began to suffer from a liver difficulty. During the attacks I experienced severe pain, accompanied by what I cannot describe better than by calling it a drawing in sensation. The agony of it was almost beyond endurance. None of the usual medicines employed in such cases had any effect upon me. From time to time I was laid up and unable to attend to my business.

Finally Mr. Lloyd, a druggist of this city, suggested your Favorite Remedy as an excellent thing for the liver. I had not taken the whole of the first bottle before I found decided relief; the pain passed away, and to my delight I regained the power to enjoy and digest my food without the former distress. Nature seemed to be setting again. I cannot express my appreciation of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy than by telling you that since my personal knowledge of its virtues I have recommended it to a great many of my friends and acquaintances.

Yours, Truly, S. PEPSON.

THE GENERAL RESULT.

As full returns are received from the several states and the official returns from New York, the result has settled down as stated in last week's HERALD. Cleveland & Hendricks have received 219 electoral votes and Blaine & Logan 182.

The only state in doubt was New York. Connecticut and New Jersey were safe for Cleveland on Wednesday. Indiana was claimed for Blaine for two days, but the full returns give that state to the Democrats by over 8,000 majority. Wisconsin goes Republican by about 10,000. Virginia gives at least 12,000 majority for Cleveland. West Virginia increases her October majority. Ohio does the same on the Republican side. The Democrats have suffered some loss in Congressmen but will have a majority of about forty in the next house, large enough for any emergency and better on some accounts than a majority twice as large.

The following table shows the popular plurality and the electoral vote in each state:

RECAPITULATION.

Democratic	219
Republican	182
Cleveland's majority	37

The result justifies the action of the July convention. The ticket was nominated to carry exactly the states which have voted for Cleveland, and it is evident now that no other ticket could have won those states. Blaine's nomination was a blunder. That was manifest within one week after it was made. The problem for the July convention to solve was this: What ticket can hold the Democratic states, and at the same time appeal to Republican disaffection in the debatable states of Connecticut, New Jersey, New York and Indiana? The logic of the situation answered—Cleveland & Hendricks. For once, the Democracy did not blunder. Casting aside personal preferences, addressing themselves to the great question before them, they accepted the challenge conveyed in Blaine's nomination and made a ticket to win.

But with the fruits of victory come also its responsibilities. This is not a mere Democratic success. Thousands of Independents, who cared more for honest government than for party, furnished the balance of power, which flung New York into the Cleveland column. That element should be treated with consideration and fairness. We believe that Grover Cleveland will make a wise, strong, prudent and honest president; that he will call about him a cabinet of able counselors; that our excessive war taxation will be lopped off, and a fair system of revenue reform introduced during his administration; and that the four years of his presidency will be years of national peace and business prosperity.

A novel feature of the December number of The Magazine of Art will be the page contributed by Miss Alice Havers and Mr. R. L. Stevenson, the former supplying a picture setting to a verse by the latter. The page will be printed in color. In the same number will appear the commencement of a description of Hatfield House, the residence of the Marqhess of Salisbury, fully illustrated, and a paper by Mrs. Fawcett on "The New Forrest." An etching by Mr. R. W. Macbeth, will form the frontispiece.

WHAT THE NEWSPAPERS SAY.

Springfield Republican, Ind: — The Republicans must give it up. Grover Cleveland is elected the next President of the United States and will be inaugurated on the 4th of March next. The candidate and campaign of falsehood fall together in mutual ruin. The grand old party—we use the words in no satiric sense—which has governed the country for twenty-four years, saving the Union, freeing the slave and retrieving financial disaster, goes down, not in honor and honors, able defeat, but in disgrace and behind a corrupt, venal and shifty leader. It fell when it nominated Blaine and before a vote had been cast. When it ran up his name to the mast head it insulted the honesty and decency of the entire country; it mistook the whoop of the Chicago mob for the honest convictions and sober character of the people of the United States. By the same act it both necessitated and defied revolution—and revolution has come.

Philadelphia Times, Ind: — The Times yesterday announced that Cleveland is elected to the Presidency. That announcement was made only when the vote of New York was fully ascertained, and subsequent events only confirm the State to Cleveland, as is manfully and patriotically declared by the Albany Evening Journal, the Republican organ of that State.

It is possible that the Gould, Elkins and Davenport desperadoes may persist in the claim that Blaine is elected against the vote they never disputed until they were defeated, but it is so obviously the dictate of fraud that neither the Republican party nor the business interests of the country will tolerate it.

Cleveland has the popular vote of New York; he has the State Board of Canvassers to compute and certify it; he has the popular branch of Congress [illegible] will be accepted and inaugurated as President of the United States.

New York World, Dem: There is no occasion for doubt, excitement or violence. The Governor of New York is a firm, fearless, honest man. The Board of State Canvassers are firm, fearless, honest men. The majority of the House of Representatives is Democratic.

If the proper legal authorities of this State should declare that Blaine has the majority of a single vote over Cleveland, we shall demand that the electoral vote of this State be given to Blaine.

But if the actual ballots now in the ballotboxes show that Cleveland has a plurality, as it is now semi-officially reported, and if the constituted authorities shall so declare, Grover Cleveland must receive the electoral vote of this State.

Obedience to law, submission and prompt submission to the constituted authorities of the State by all parties and all candidates, is the duty of the hour.

Partisan bravado to the contrary is a danger to law and order.

New York Sun, Ind: The people have determined that Grover Cleveland shall be President of the United States. They have so decided, not because they like Cleveland, but because they believe he will be safer than Blaine. They have done it resolutely, deliberately, knowing all about both men. Thanks to the press on both sides, religious and political, the controlling facts in the character and history of each have been pretty clearly brought before the public eye, so that the popular judgement in the case may be described as intelligent and well considered. The people have voted, and their voting is to be respected. Henceforth, until his administration is developed, whatever criticism is bestowed upon Mr. Cleveland should be directed toward his new and not his old performances. There are those who promise that he will prove himself quite equal to the responsibilities of the Presidency. Let us hope, for the country's sake, that this promise may be realized; and we undertake to say that if it should be so, the fact will not anywhere be more cordially recognized than among those intelligent and high minded men who have so earnestly contended against his election.

Chicago News, Ind.: The mutterings of public discontent over the inauguration of President Hayes have hardly died away. New York can not be seized for Mr. Blaine as Louisiana was for Mr. Hayes. It is too near the homes of the great reading, thinking mass of the people. The spirit of resistance to any attempt to vitiate the will of the people by any attempt at trickery is abroad. The sober business sense of the nation, generally too indifferent to political affairs must be against any resort to fraud to retain any set of men now in power. It sees that the danger of defeating the will of the nation is infinitely greater to all pecuniary interests than the success of any party. Parties may come and go, bad men may be elected, unwise policies may be adopted, but so long as the verdict of the people's will is not tampered with at the ballot-box this nation is safe. Destroy confidence in that as the last, final, and unimpeachable arbiter of our government and we have nothing left but the hope of revolution. To the verge of this bitter alternative desperate politicians may bring us. They may go too far. The crowds cheering and chaffing in the streets to-day may by the slightest incident be provoked to violence. So far good nature has marked the rivalry of the two parties, because neither has believed that the other would resort to any means to defeat the popular will once it was ascertained. Should this feeling be turned to anger over any real or fancied wrong, who can fortell the consequences. The Democrats have a popular majority of at least 200,000 in the country in this election. It is not in human nature that they should the second time peacably submit to seeing a republican president inaugurated about whose election there were grave suspicions of fraud.

If there is any patrotism or discretion left in the managers of Mr. Blaine's canvass they will not attempt to tamper with the returns.

Any body can catch cold now. The trouble is to let go, like the man who caught the bear. We advise our readers to keep a bottle of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup handy.

TEMPERANCE DEPARTMENT.

EDITED BY A COMMITTEE OF THE UNION PROHIBITION PARTY.

Motto:—No License for the Liquor Traffic in any form or for any price.

RUM IN POLITICS.

We ask a careful consideration by the temperance people of the following editorial taken from the Toledo Blade of Nov. 8th.

Those who are disposed to treat the Whisky and Beer Interest as a mere passive nuisance, something that is annoying to all and dangerous to some need be instructed as to what it is and what its pretentions really are. It is not a mere nothing, the effects of which are to be felt only by those who are its direct victims. We wish to make it plain that the liquor interest, the great Beer interest especially, is less dangerous to the individual than to the community at large, that the people who are without the appetite are just as much or even more interested in destroying the traffic than those who are. The habitual drinker ruins himself and his family, but the evil does not stop with them and those immediately connected with him.

A brief history of one piece of legislation in Ohio is sufficient to illustrate our meaning.

Two years ago the legislature of the state of Ohio passed the Scott law, which taxed liquor sellers $200 annually. In as much as this legislature was Republican, politically, the ire of the brewing interest was directed at that organization. The Brewer has no politics. He cares nothing for banks, tariffs, internal improvements, or anything of the sort. He has a profit on beer of from $1 to $2 per barrel, and all the interest he has in politics is to insure the continuance of the business, the making of as many consumers of beer as possible, and the privilege of selling to them week-days and Sundays, unrestrained by law.

The Democratic party were not slow to take advantage [illegible] on the part of Republicans. They met the Brewer at a secret meeting, and this bargain was made:—

The Democracy agreed to permit the Brewers to dictate the nominations for the legislature, and the vacancy on the Supreme Bench of the state, that the law should be either repealed or declared unconstitutional.

The Brewers agreed to organize the saloon-keepers in the interest of the Democracy, and to furnish all the money for campaign purposes.

The bargain was carried out by the Brewers to the letter. They raised more money for campaign purposes than had ever been used in a state election, and the Republicans, not anticipating this new element in politics were caught napping. Hoadly was elected Governor and the Democratic candidate for supreme judge and a Democratic legislature.

The Democracy were loth to carry out the infamous bargain. The Democratic legislature balked immediately, and tried to compromise on something less than a repeal of the law, but the brewers would accept nothing less than what they had bought and paid for. The brewers and the legislature quarrelled all the winter, and the legislature adjourned without doing anything.

The Brewers were firm and uncompromising. Before the October election this year they reminded the Democracy of their breach of faith by abstaining from active interference, giving them warning of what would happen in November if the bargain was not carried out. The only way left to do it was by the Supreme court, and the villainous compact was consummated the latter part of October.

A partisan Supreme court, elected by the Brewer's for the purpose, declared the Scott law unconstitutional, which not only frees the Brewers from any further interference, but compels the counties to refund the money already collected, which aggregates, in the state, something over $3,000,000.

What we want to impress upon our readers, is the fact that beer and whisky is a power, which, as parties are divided and are likely to be, holds the balance of power in all the states, controlling not only the legislative and executive branches of the state governments, but the judicial. They control the political actions of the thousands of saloon-keepers, whom they own, body, soul, boots and breeches; they have millions of dollars and the most lucrative business in the world at stake, and they are utterly and entirely without interest in matters political except as it effects their peculiar traffic.

Ohio stands before the world as a state whose executive, legislative and judicial departments are the mere instruments of the liquor interest of the state, elected by this interest, under a bargain to carry out its behests. It is not the farmers, merchants and manufacturers of Ohio who control the government of the state; it is the Brewers and their satellites, the keepers of the saloons. One interest governs the state of Ohio.

Is the interest that makes criminals and fosters criminally the fit repository of the law-making power?

Is the interest which is at war with law and order, with the schools and churches, the proper one to govern a country, the existence of which depends entirely upon the intelligence and virtue of the people?

Is the interest that is hand-in-glove with crime, which is the fountain head of everything that is debasing and degrading, the interest that thrives only upon crime, and which is the parent of disorder, the interest to control the Government?

In Ohio it has seized the legislative and executive departments, and has forced its way upon the supreme bench. For the first time in the history of the state, a judge has been elected, not to construe law, but for the specific purpose of destroying a law. For the first time in the history of the state a partisan decision has been made, by a judge whose election was in pursuance of a bargain.

If this is done in the green tree what will it be in the dry? If this can be done in the state why not in the Nation? If Ohio can be captured by the brewers, what state is safe?

There is but one way to curtail the power of this fiendish interest, and this is to kill it. There is no intermediate way. To license it is to give it as much power for evil as ever, and to make a crime legal and respectable. To attempt any restraint is to give it the sanction of the law. Absolute Prohibition is the only way to rid the country of it. To do anything else is to nurse it, and give it the power to protect itself. The only thing to do is for practical men to take hold of a movement the object of which is to kill the traffic.

A MAN named Wildes was arrested at Ft. Keogh, Mont., a few days ago for smuggling clothing over the line from Canada. Wildes is one of a party whose operations have been through the Northwest taking orders for clothing at very low rates, which orders were sent to the Ontario Clothing Manufacturing Company and then by the aid of half-breeds and others smuggled over the line. The goods were then deposited at the nearest express office, directed to the customers.

THE report that France and China had arrived at satisfactory agreement for the settlement of their difficulties has been confirmed. China recognizes the Tien Tsin treaty, and an armistice has been arranged so as to settle the Tonquin frontier question.

JAMES COMMINS, while attempting to enter the saloon of John Criss, at Akron, Ohio, through the back yard a few days ago, was seized by a black bear which is kept chained in the yard, and was terribly chewed up. The right knee was fairly eaten out, the bones being crushed and tendons pulled out. The leg will be amputated.

PROBABLY the only vote in Indiana for Belva Lockwood was cast at the Sixth ward polls, Vincennes, that State, by Mrs Dr. Mason, a highly respected lady. She walked up to the polls and said she wanted to vote. Her appearance created great surprise, but through courtesy the crowd of politicians stepped back, lifted their hats and allowed her to approach the window. The Inspector asked her what she wanted, and Mrs. Mason replied with a smile, that she wanted to vote for Mrs. Lockwood. She then handed him a little piece of white paper on which was written, "For President of the United States, Mrs. Belva Lockwood." Mrs. Mason then withdrew. The ballot was counted.

REAR ADMIRAL ALEXANDER MURRAY died at Washington on the 10th, aged sixty-six years. He participated in the war with Mexico and in the naval conflicts of the Rebellion.

REV. CHARLES F. BARNARD, an eminent divine of Boston, died on the 10th, aged [illegible] years.

ADVICES from Turk's Island, under date of the 2d, state that the brig John E. Haskell, Captain Paine, sailed from Wavassa, October 11, for Baltimore with guano. She encountered a hurricane on October 14 and sprung a leak, which rapidly increased, and the brig was abandoned on the 16th, and the crew, eight in number, took to the boats and made Caicos Island. In attempting to land the boat was capsized and all on board except the Captain and one sailor named Henry Grant were drowned.

THE final report of the National Cotton Exchange, issued at New Orleans on the 10th, estimates the cotton crop of the United States for this year at 5,726,000 bales, or a trifle larger than last year. Should the prospects of the top crop in certain sections be realized, some 75,000 bales may be added. In Texas there was a large decrease, and in the Mississippi valley the crop is not quite up to last season, but the Atlantic States and Alabama show gains to offset these deficiencies.

Never interrupt any conversation with a hacking cough; it creates a bad impression. Better invest a quarter of a dollar in a bottle of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup and cure it.

Mr. Francis Lathrop, whose fame as a decorative painter is well known in connection with the Metropolitan Opera House, and other public and private buildings, has made a handsome and striking design for the cover of Cassell's Family Magazine. The new cover will appear on the first number of the volume for January, 1885, and will be ready December 12th 1884.

Only a Step.

When catarrh has progressed to a certain extent, it is only a step to that terribly fatal disease, consumption. If you have catarrh, even slightly, it is a terrible mistake to allow it to continue its course unchecked. If you will only read, you will find conclusive reasons why you should take Hood's Sarsaparilla for catarrh, in the statements of many people who have been completely cured of this disease in its most severe forms. Send for book containing abundant evidence, to C. L. Hood & Co., proprietors of Hood's Sarsaparilla, Lowell, Mass.

Melon brandy is the newest drink. It was discovered by a Frenchman, and is said to be a potent and seductive liquid, a little stronger than applejack.

If you wish to know what you eat in the shape of Baking Powder, boil a little in water. Ammonia smells, alum also and tasts bitter; stareh, flour or filling of any kind, which is dead weight, will be left in the cup, while if made from cream Tartar and Soda, like DeLand's Chemical Baking Powder, it will leave the water clear. DeLand's Chemical Baking Powder is now offered by our merchants, and after making this test our friends will have learned how to detect one imposition at least. DeLand & Co., ought to have a reward.

A CARD.

To the Electors of Lenawee County. Your earnest and liberal support in my late canvass for the office of State Senator, as well as the vote you gave me at the late election, demands of me a cheerful recognition to all for the liberal efforts made in my behalf. Although unsuccessful, nevertheless my unalloyed obligation is hereby extended to you all. And I shall in future feel under the most respectful obligation to the voters of Lenawee County for the liberal support given me in the late election.—Cambridge, Nov. 7, 1884.

HEDGE FENCES FOR FARMS.

The question of how to fence our farms is becoming a serious one, and the Dayton Hedge Co. of Dayton, O. claim to have settled it in favor of their hedge. A committee of farmers in this state investigated the hedge last summer, and also the responsibility of the company, and at the close of a long report, they say, "We feel that we can freely recommend the Dayton Hedge Co. and their plans to all farmers who need fences." In this committee were C. G. Luce of Coldwater, A. P. Halliday of Clinton, Z. Cook of Raisin, and P. J. VanVleet of Tecumseh. More than 150 miles of their hedge was planted in Lenawee county during the past season, and probably as much more will be set out next summer. This is a matter which farmers will do well to investigate. The fence costs no more than any other good fence, and will outlast, two or three times over, any common rail or board fence. We understand that Dell Goodrich, of Clinton, controls the four townships of Franklin, Clinton, Tecumseh and Macon, and is prepared to receive orders for the Dayton hedge from residents of those townships. It will pay you to see him.

In the fall of 1860 Mrs. Judge Stacy stored away a lot of fine tallow intending to mould it into candles with which to illuminate the house in honor of Stephen A. Douglas's election. Owing to circumstances beyond her control it was not used for that purpose. That tallow has been seasoning in the cellar for twenty four years. Last Tuesday it was taken from its hiding place, Mrs. Charley Brown moulded it into candles, and those candles illuminated the old mansion last evening.

A pleasant surprise was made Mr. and Mrs. A. Stearns, at their residence on last Saturday evening. The occasion was the 46th anniversary of their wedding day. A beautiful hanging lamp, purchased by their friends, was presented by the Rev. G. W. Hudson, their pastor, in well chosen words. The sweet hymn "Shall we gather at the river" was heartily sung. After many expressions of friendship and esteem had been given, and a season of social entertainment enjoyed, the company retired, leaving the worthy couple in their quiet home.—Mr. and Mrs. Stearns wish to return their sincere thanks to the doners.

Adrian Times: Mr. H. S. Lee, of Tecumseh, is a tall, substantial looking gentleman, who wears a solid pair of whiskers and a genial expression, and his expression, it might be well to state, is fully substantiated by his actions. The only thing his friends record against him is his political complexion. Mr. Lee is the proprietor of the Patterson House, the elegant new hotel, of which Tecumseh people are beginning to make some well founded boasts. The hotel stands on Chicago street, and is a very finished structure throughout. It is provided with all the modern improvements, including the electric call bell system. It has eighteen sleeping rooms. A porch which is 24 feet long and 10 feet wide adds much to the attractiveness and comfort of the house. The building will be ready for business in about three weeks. The house will probably be leased to Landlord Delano, late of St. Clair.

Special meeting of Tecumseh Lodge No. 69, F. & A. M., Friday evening, Nov. 14th. Work in 3rd. degree.

John A. Merritt, an old Tecumseh boy, is the present Republican County Clerk of Niagara County, N. Y.

Rev. I. A. Eberhart, formerly of Tecumseh, will preach at the Universalist church next Sunday at the usual hour.

Rev. Wm. H. Puddefoot, formerly of Tecumseh, was in attendance at the Congregational Missionary meeting held at Clinton last Saturday.

The official count is progressing in New York. Forty counties have been canvassed and no material change made. It is now thought that whatever contest is made will be in New York city.

Blinn Tallman has placed the HERALD boys under obligation for some new cider. It was the genuine Cleveland & Hendricks article and sweet enough for a prohibitionist to take with impunity.

The Macon Prohibition Club will meet at Grange Hall Monday evening Nov. 17. All who sympathize with the temperance movement are invited to meet with us. Speakers are expected to be present.

Mr. Ephriam Darwin, an old resident of Tecumseh was in town on Monday. He left here in 1845, and has been living in Madison Wis. since 1851. He was here fifteen years ago on a visit, but the town has changed so much during that time that he hardly knew it.

Elegant invitations are out announcing a social party to be given by the "Owl Club" at Armory Hall on Wednesday evening, Nov. 26. As this will be the first dance of the season, there ought to be a good crowd. Supper will be served by the old reliable caterer, W. T. Eccles.

Attention Ladies—To the nice line of felts and trimmed goods, all prices to suit the times. Jersey caps, velvet hats, tinsil bonnets. Also, children's bonnets in a variety of shapes, desirable frames, orders made neat and promptly at Mrs. N. R. Brown's Millinery rooms, over Anderson's Dry Goods Store.

Several of our young men have organized a social club which they have designated the "Owl Club." They have procured rooms over H. E. Anderson's store, which have been nicely fitted up for head quarters. The members intend to conduct their affairs on a high moral plane, and no questionable conduct will be tolerated in the institution. The owl is the bird of wisdom, and the young men design to shape their actions in harmony with their name and trade mark.

FLASHES BY C. T. LINE.

For some time you have not heard from the C. T. but the operators are not asleep. With rush of business, campaign speeches and election returns we get enough to keep the line from getting dull, and we think more of our line every day.

Clarence Cook and the Kimball boys assisted by some of the enterprising young men of Franklin, have worked up an adition to the west end of the line. It will take five miles of wire and one hundred and fifty poles and brackets. The poles are nearly all on the ground and they expect to have them set before cold weather. This will give us communication with Franklin Centre and within two miles of Sand Lake, to which place it will probably be put through next summer. Manager Bowen has already ordered the wire and brackets from the Detroit Electrical works.

Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Hinkson, of Kent Co., are visiting at Ambrose Welch's.

A number of farmers are fall plowing for corn and oats in hopes to get ahead of the white grubs. It is a capital time for such work.

Abner Wilson claims to have raised more marketable cabbages from two acres of ground than any gardener in Tecumseh or Clinton.

Geo. Knapp is moving to town and will occupy Mr. P. C. Mills' residence, on Chicago St.

The country operators on C. T. line are under obligations to the village operators for election news the past week.

We are sorry to say that Mrs. Abram Derby is supposed to be afflicted with a cancer.

Wesley Snooks has about completed the laying of stone for a cellar wall for Willis Smith's house.

Horatio Keyser goes to Adrian this week to attend court as a petit juror—pretty old to be courting.

Hiram Learnard has sold his farm being part of the old Merritt farm on the turnpike, to Ezra Simmons. This makes Ezra the largest land owner in Franklin. Mr. Learnard expects to go to Kansas soon.

B. C. Knapp offers to rent his farm and will then move to town. Retired farmers are getting numerous.

M. W. Sweet's men are having some difficulty in digging a well on Milburn Keyser's farm. They have reached a depth of 80 feet and no water.

LUMBER & BUILDING MATERIAL.

THE GROWTH AND PRESENT CONDITION OF THE HEAVY FIRM OF WOLCOTT TEMPLE & CO.

Where to Buy Lumber at Wholesale or Retail. A Large and Successful Business. One of the Strongest Establishments in Southern Michigan.

A large business is a thing of slow growth. Our heaviest and most productive business enterprises do not spring up, like a mushroom, in the middle of the night, but they are the result of years of hard work and careful management. The present firm of Wolcott Temple & Co. and the business controlled by them illustrate this fact. As early as 1865 Chatterdon, Kinney & Co. started a small lumber yard and sash factory at the North end of Pearl street in this village. The business about 1870 passed into A. W. Slayton's hands and afterwards into the control of Slayton & Caldwell. Two of the present partners, Isaac C. Wolcott and John S. Temple, bought the business in 1875, and three years ago Samuel McClure was admitted to the firm. They now own and control one of the best equipped planing mills and one of the largest stocked lumber yards in Southern Michigan.

Their mill is located on Bidwell street, north of the Lake Shore depot and adjoining a side track from which cars can be unloaded directly into their yards. The main building is thirty by one hundred feet in size, with an "ell" on the North side about forty by fifty feet and a separate engine and boiler room, the entire building except the boiler room being 2 stories high. An engine and boiler of large capacity furnish the motive power to run the machinery in the shop. The shop is now furnished with the following machines. One new 28 in. planer, bought two years ago; one new 24 in. planer and matcher; one new 8 in. four side moulder; one smaller moulder; one tenoner; one whittler; one mortiser; blind, slat and boring machines; sand paper machine; and a large assortment of saws and small machinery. One room of the shop in the north addition is rented to James H. Potter for a furniture factory, who leases both the room and the steam power to run his own machinery.

Across the corner from the planing mill is located the office, which is a neat two story building containing the business office and a room for finishing and glazing doors and windows. On the same corner is their main lumber yard, a lot eight by twelve rods in size which is literally packed with lumber, timber, shingles, lath, and all kinds of lumber in the rough. Across the West end of this lot is a covered shed which is used for the storage of mouldings and other light and dry material. A large two story shed for the storage of finished work is located East of the planing mill.

The firm manufacture and sell in large and small quantities building material of all kinds, which includes not only lumber, but lath, shingles, doors, blinds, windows, both sash and ready glazed, and mouldings of all kinds for interior work. Owing to the length of time they have been in business, they have extra facilities for purchasing lumber direct from the mills in Northern Michigan. They buy their lumber in large quantities at lowest cash price, and can sell accordingly. In the line of finished work they have established an excellent reputation. Many of the finest buildings in Tecumseh and surrounding towns, which have been erected within the past ten years, have been furnished from their yards and shops. Among the jobs turned out from their shops during the past summer may be mentioned these. The lumber and interior work for A. W. Mills' new house; the entire bill of lumber for Geo. S. Tiffany's new house on Chicago St; the lumber &c. for the Franklin parsonage; same for residences of George Walter and Joe Cramer of Manchester. They make a specialty of giving figures for farm houses and barns to include everything except mason work. During the past year they have furnished the material for new farm houses and barns in Tecumseh, Clinton, Macon, Ridgeway, Franklin, Raisin, Bridgewater, Blissfield, Saline, Cambridge, Addison, Pittsford, and many other towns in this vicinity. In addition to this local trade they frequently ship an invoice in car load lots into other states.

The firm early adopted the policy of employing good workmen and keeping them. Many of the employees in the shop have been there for ten years or more. The proprietors themselves are all practical men in the business. Mr. Temple has been engaged in that business over ten years and since entering this firm he has been the practical manager of the business. Mr. Wolcott had experience in that direction before he bought an interest in this firm. Mr. McClure has been for years a practical sash, door and blind maker, and he superintends that part of the shop.

The establishment, as now constituted, is admirably equipped for doing a large and lucrative business. First-class managers, the best of workmen, a complete shop, all the latest and most improved machinery and a full assortment of all kinds of lumber. It has taken a place among the most flourishing of Tecumseh's manufacturing industries and is destined to hold that position for many years to come.

LIBRARY LECTURE COURSE.

A Course of Six Entertainments to be Given This Winter—Four of Them Already Engaged.

The committee of the Library Association, having in charge the lecture course, have engaged four entertainments, and have presented their report to the public with an appeal for season tickets.

The first entertainment will be by The Redpath Lyceum Concert Co., on December 6th. The company is composed of the following eminent Solo Artists: Miss Ella M. Chamberlin, Whistling Soloist; Miss Edith Christie, Violin; Mr. Frank G. Reynolds, Humorist; Mr. Frank Gilder, Piano.

The novelty of Miss Chamberlin's whistling solos, in which field she is without a rival, the artistic skill of Miss Christie's violin playing, the rare humor of Mr. Gilder's masterly work as solo pianist and accompanist, have compelled the great popularity which this company has attained. This is a $200 company.

Probably an entertainment of some kind will be given during the last half of December.

On January 1, (New Year,) will appear the celebrated Schubert Quartette, J. L. Johnson, First Tenor, Homer F. Stone, Second Tenor, John R. Tyley, Baritone, Geo. H. Iott, Bass. A $200 company. Assisted by Miss Dora Hennings, Mezzo Soprano, Dramatic.

Miss Hennings ranks with the few great singers of the world, and is equally at home in concert, oratorio or opera. Miss Hennings is a tall, a most superb woman, with graceful, statuesque gesture, and possesses a rare rich full toned mezzo soprano voice, which has been well trained under the best masters. The Chicago Tribune says: "She is a singer of whom America ought to be proud."

About January 20th will appear William I. Marshall, formerly of Montana Territory. Subject—An evening in Wonderland; or, Yellowstone National Park. Illustrated with the Stereopticon. Part 1.—The Geysers and other Wonders of the Fire-Hole Valley. The Scenery of the Upper Yellowstone. The entertainment splendidly illustrated with dissolving Views by the Calcium Light Stereopticon, with brilliant Photographs from Nature.

"Worth a score of ordinary lectures."—Zion's Herald. "Should be repeated in every town in the United States."—N. Y. Observer.

Early in February they will have The Meigs Underhill Combination, consisting of the Meigs Sisters' Vocal Quartette, and Charles F. Underhill Humorous, Dramatic and Dialect Elocutionist, all of New York.

The Meigs Sisters' Vocal Quartette consists of Miss Hattie, first soprano; Miss Jennie, second soprano; Miss Edith, first contralto, and Miss Florence, second contralto. Great care has been taken with their musical education, and they have had for a maestro one of the best teachers of the metropolis. They possess rich and sympathetic voices, they sing in unison, and their execution shows the care and judgment that has been exercised in their instruction. Among their selections may be enumerated some of the quartettes of Mendelsohn, Schubert, Schuman, etc. Mr. Chas. F. Underhill occupies a foremost place in the ranks of public readers, and is a great favorite wherever he has appeared. His work harmonizes well with the singing of the young ladies.

Rev. J. H. Vincent, D.D., says: The Meigs Underhill combination spent several days at Chautauqua this season, to the delight of our great audiences. The Meigs Sisters are highly cultivated singers, rendering the most classical music with ease and effectiveness. Their charming part songs can never be excelled at Chautauqua. Mr. Underhill is a remarkable reader, a master of pathos and humor, and has a repertoire apparently inexhaustable. We expect to have them again next season.

The Committee expect to add two entertainments to be selected from the following: T. DeWitt Talmage; Robt. Collyer; Spanish Students; W. M. B. French, Popular Chalk Talk man; Elizabeth Mansfield Irving, Toledo's popular Elocutionist; Miss Helen Potter, Elocutionist and Impersonator; Stuart Rogers, Elocutionist and Impersonator; and others.

The selection will be determined largely by their success in selling season tickets. The proceeds of these entertainments, after paying expenses, will be used in purchasing new books for the Library. The Library now has about 800 volumes, has been well patronized during the first year of its existence, and they hope to make it one of the chief attractions of the village.

They have decided to put the tickets for the course of six first-class entertainments at the very low price of $1.50. Tickets for single entertainments, 35 cents each. Reserved seat ticket for single entertainment 50cts. for sale four days previous to each entertainment. Any holder of a season ticket can secure a reserved seat by paying 10cts. extra.

Evening News: Dave Bixby, one of the sweet singers of the last legislature, is the clerk-elect in Lenawee county. He is not the prettiest man on record but a more truly innocent and guilelessly good natured chap never looked through spectacles.

The M. & O. railroad company has passed into the hands of a receiver. J. A. Latcha, the former President of the road, has received the appointment.

The Democrats of Tecumseh held a jollification meeting last evening, and although the time for getting it up was very limited, and only an impromptu meeting was attempted, it was a very creditable affair. A torch-light procession headed by the Adrian band marched through the principal streets and finally brought up at the opera house where the crowd listened to speeches by C. H. Dewey, Esq. and Judge Stacy. Some of the stores in town were illuminated and a large number of private residences, the following on the line of march: Frank Bunnamy, H. J. Snell, Harry Lee, Geo. Wilson, E. H. Hoag, S. W. Temple, P. C. Temple, C. F. Field, A. Harden burg, E. B. Wood, J. H. Smith, Chas. Gray, Hessie Cupples, John Whitenack, C. A. Stacy, W. Orr, John J. Orr, John Orr, Sr., Morris Hyde, John Hialey, Wm. Hayden, Delos Whitenack, A. J. Palmer, T. P. Keyser, Alfred James, James Boyd. We understand that several other houses were lighted up, but as they were off the line of march we have been unable to gather them.

Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine

The December number received closes the sixteenth volume of this admirable publication, and it is even more than usually interesting. Now is the time to subscribe, and the new volume promises to be one of brilliant character. In the present number "Raffelio Sanzio De Urbino," "The Capital of Georgia," "Schiller, the Poet of Freedom," etc., are prominent articles, beautifully illustrated. Alfreton Hervey still continues the interesting sketches, "Sacred Musicians of the XIXth Century": the editor, Dr. Talmage, has a characteristic article, "The Epidemic of Swindle," and sermon in the Home Pulpit, "The Dumb Prayer Answered." There are also serial and short stories, sketches, essays and poems by favorite writers, and a miscellany abundant and entertaining. The illustrations are numerous and fine specimens of art. The price is only 25 cents a number, or $2.50 a year, post-paid. Mrs. Frank Leslie, publisher, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, N. Y.

Right to the point

The Rev. J. E. Searles, of New York, is one of the most widely-known and highly esteemed of Methodist ministers.

Mr. Searles says: "I am impressed that it is a duty I owe to those afflicted with Rheumatism or Neuralgia, to say that a remedy has been discovered that is indeed a marvelous success. My son was greatly afflicted with Rheumatism, and suffered so severely that at times he was obliged to have his limbs bandaged into the form to get rest. Multitudes of friends recommended remedies which effected immediate relief, and a permanent cure. He has since recommended it to many others with the same result. I have also furnished it to a number of persons suffering with Rheumatism, and the result has been astonishing and a permanent cure. A month since, I gave it to Rev. W. E. Corbit, pastor of the Church St. M. E. Church, New Haven, Conn., who was suffering greatly with this terrible disease. I will show you his unsolicited words as written to my son, asking him to publish the fact for the benefit of others suffering with the same disease."

What Mr. Corbit Says:

New Haven, July 24, 1882.

"Mr. Searles—Dear Sire—I wish to say for the benefit of all who are suffering with Inflammatory Rheumatism, that Your medicine is infallible. I suffered for two months the most excruciating torture; lost 35 pounds of flesh, and was not out of my house for a month. I heard of your remedy, and was almost instantly relieved by it. If there is a specific for diseases of any kind, yours most certainly is for Inflammatory Rheumatism, in its severest form."

Yours most respectfully, WM. E. CORBIT,
"Pastor George St. M. E. Church, New Haven, Conn."

Such is ATHLOPHOROS—a thorough and efficient cure for the worst cases of Rheumatism and Neuralgia.

HALL'S Vegetable Sicilian

was the first preparation perfectly adapted to cure diseases of the scalp, and the first successful restorer of faded or gray hair to its natural color, growth, and youthful beauty. It has had many imitators, but none have so fully met all the requirements needful for the proper treatment of the hair and scalp. HALL'S HAIR RENEWER has steadily grown in favor, and spread its fame and usefulness to every quarter of the globe. Its unparalleled success can be attributed to but one cause: the entire fulfilment of its promises.

The proprietors have often been surprised at the receipt of orders from remote countries, where they had never made an effort for its introduction.

The use for a short time of HALL'S HAIR RENEWER wonderfully improves the personal appearance. It cleanses the scalp from all impurities, cures all humors, fever, and dryness, and thus prevents baldness. It stimulates the weakened glands, and enables them to push forward a new and vigorous growth. The effects of this article are not transient, like those of alcoholic preparations, but remain a long time, which makes its use a matter of economy.

—Mat O'Reardon, the song-writer, who died in the Louisville Charity Hospital a few days ago, was the originator of the musical glasses, music produced by rubbing the fingers about the rim of tumblers partially filled with water. He is said to have written the popular song, "My Dream of Love is O'er" soon after he discovered that the love he bore for Alice Oates was not reciprocated.

—In Washington they tell that John McCullough once, when playing there, went out to the hotel at Cabin John's Bridge for dinner, and thoughtlessly tarried there until a quarter past seven, when, for the first time, he remembered that he must appear on Ford's stage as Spartacus at 8:20 precisely. And he was fourteen miles away from that stage. It took five minutes to get the swiftest horse at the hotel harnessed to a light wagon, and there remained just an hour for the drive and to dress in. Mr. McCullough came on the stage only five minutes later, and never played Spartacus better in his life than then.

HUMOROUS.

—A local paper says, rather ambiguously, that the Cornell freshmen class this year will embrace twenty young women.—N. Y. Independent.

—"Do cats think?" queries a writer. Yes, they sometimes think that the man up in the window with the night-cap on is a mighty poor shot with a boot-jack.

—"The half dollar of 1825 is not rare," says a Philadelphia authority. Indeed, no. It is the half dollar of 1884 that is rare.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

—When Clara was asked what she would do if a nice young gentleman would ask her hand in marriage, she naively replied: "I don't think I'd no."—Yonkers Statesman.

—An absent-minded teacher amused her class at the re-opening of a school the other day. Having carefully received the names in the class from each member, she said: "I shall now call the roll, to see if you are all present."

—Mother: "Do hurry up, Robbie; unless you hurry more you'll never be anything of a business man when you grow up." Robbie: "O, yes, I will, ma. When I grow up and go into business, I'll have a lot of clerks to do my hurrying for me."—Philadelphia Call.

—Bound to Whistle:

Oh, whistle, daughter, whistle, and you shall have a cow;
I never whistled in my life, and I can't whistle now.

Oh, whistle, daughter, whistle, and you shall have a man;
I never whistled in my life, but I'll whistle if I can.

—It is claimed that a new species of hippopotamus has been discovered on a remote part of the River Nile. This intelligence will be received with a degree of great satisfaction. Next to another professional base-ball club, there was nothing this country yearned for with a more yearning yearnfulness than a new species of hippopotamus.—Norristown Herald.

—"What's the matter with your eye, old man; somebody hit you?" "Yes. I told Smith last night that he was no gentleman and he busted me one." "Did you wipe out the insult?" "I didn't, but I went right home and my wife wiped it out as well as she could. I may have to outgrow some of it." "Good day; there comes Smith now."—Burlington Hawk-eye.

—The other evening quite a chill was in the air, and George ventured out on Sixth Avenue with his girl. "The night air is chilly," he said, with a little shiver. "If you were more warmly clad I would ask you to have some ice cream but that thin muslin dress, and——" "I am not at all cold!" the girl interrupted. "To be sure I might have thrown something over my shoulders; but, George, dear, think how warmly I am wrapped up in you." At this George's fears gave way, and a few moments later a smartly-dressed waiter was deferentially inclining his ear.—N. Y. Independent.

A Prudent Father.

"Why, don't you take the daily papers at the house?" was asked of a miss of sixteen, who was looking up and down Howard street for a newsboy yesterday afternoon.

"Oh, yes; but about every other morning father suppresses them and we must go without the news."

"Why should he do that?"

"There's probably another elopement with a coachman, and he doesn't want me to see the particulars."

"And so you buy the papers?"

"Just so—all the morning and evening issues, and I read 'em to the last line. Pa is a dear, good old fellow, but if he gets ahead of me he's got to stop the printing presses instead of the papers."—Detroit Free Press.

Downright Cruelty

To permit yourself and family to "Suffer!"
With sickness when it can be prevented and cured so easily
With Hop Bitters!!!

Having experienced a great deal of "Trouble" from indigestion, so much so that I came near losing my Life!

My trouble always came after eating any food—

However light
And digestible,

For two or three hours at a time I had to go through the most
Excruciating pains,
"And the only way I ever got
"Relief"
Was by throwing up all my stomach contained. No one can conceive the pains that I had to go through, until
"At last
I was taken! So that for three weeks I lay in bed and
Could eat nothing!

My sufferings were so that I called two doctors to give me something that would stop the pain; their Efforts were no good to me.
At last I heard a good deal
"About your Hop Bitters!
And determined to try them."
Got a bottle—in four hours I took the contents of
One!
Next day I was out of bed, and have not seen a
"Sick"
Hour, from the same cause since.

I have recommended it to hundreds of others. You have no such "Advocate as I am."—Geo. Kendall, Allston, Boston, Mass.

Columbus Advocate, Texas, April 21, 1883. Dear Editor:—I have tried your Hop Bitters, and find they are good for any complaint. The best medicine I ever used in my family.—H. TALKNER.

School teachers and school children in Vermont, are not allowed to use tobacco in any form.

The Proper Way.

To attach a stamp to an envelope is to moisten the envelope and then apply the stamp. Try this. If we all did the proper thing we would use Dr. Jones' Red Clover Tonic for dyspepsia, costiveness, bad breath, piles, pimples, ague and malaria disease, poor appetite, low spirits, headache, or diseases of the kidneys, stomach and liver. Price 50 cents, of Baker & Hall.

It costs not less than $33,000,000 annually to support the dogs of the United States.

Catarrh is a constitutional disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a constitutional remedy. It cures catarrh. Give it a trial.

Rev. Wm. Stout, Wiaston, Ont., states: Being ineffectually treated by 17 doctors for Scrofula, I was cured by Burdock Blood Bitters. Write for proof.

The three outlets of disease are the bowels, the skin and the kidneys. Regulate their action with the best purifying tonic, Burdock Blood Bitters.

An Important Discovery.

The most important Discovery is that which brings the most good to the greatest number. Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs, and Colds, will preserve the health and save life, and is a priceless boon to the afflicted. Not only does it possively cure Consumption, but Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Asthma, Hoarseness, and all affections of the Throat, Chest, and Lungs yield at once to its wonderful curative powers. If you doubt this, get a Trial Bottle Free, at C. A. Wright & Co's Drug store.

The liquor dealers of Philadelphia pay $275,000 in licenses annually.

Avoid the harsh, irritating, griping compounds so often sold as purging medicines, and correct the irregularities of the bowels by the use of Ayer's Cathartic Pills, which are mild and gentle, yet thorough and searching, in their action.

It is estimated that there are 40,000 bicycles in the United States.

C. A. Wright & Co. guarantee positive relief for any cough, cold, croup or lung complaint by using Acker's English Remedy, or will refund the money.

California has more suicides than any other State in the Union.

Ask C. A. Wright & Co. about Acker's Blood Elixir, the only preparation guaranteed to cleanse the blood and remove all chronic diseases.

The Shah of Persia indulges in the luxury of a pipe worth $400,000.

C. A. Wright & Co. wish it known that they guarantee Acker's Dyspepsia Tablets to be the best remedy for indigestion ever made, they always relieve headache.

The Indians, knowing the value of Wild Cherry bark as a cure for coughs and colds, used to prepare it in their rude way, and in winter kept it constantly on hand. The careful and secret method of preparing Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry makes it superior to all other preparations. It is very pleasant to take.

Hood's Sarsaparilla, acting through the blood, reaches every part of the system, and in this way positively cures catarrh.

FOUR POINTS
Prepared by an entirely NEW METHOD.
Composed of the PUREST MATERIALS.
WILL NOT INJURE THE FABRIC.
WILL CLEANSE WITHOUT RUBBING, and save Time, Labor, Fuel, Soap and Clothing.

You can do a large washing without any rubbing, use the boiling process instead. You can save Time, Labor, Fuel, Soap and Clothing.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.

Cut up fine and dissolve one half bar in half gallon of hot water. Pour half this dissolved soap into a tub with just sufficient hot water to cover a boiler full of clothes. Then put the clothes in to soak, rubbing plenty of soap in the most soiled parts. Be sure that the boiling water is hot; soak the clothes half an hour; stir them occasionally so that they may get the full benefit of the hot suds; pour the remainder of the dissolved soap into the boiler, adding sufficient water to cover the clothes; wring them lightly out of the suds. Soap the stained spots and place loosely in the boiler; boil 15 to 20 minutes, rinse well, blue and hang to dry. By adding a little soap to each boiler-full of clothes, Flannels and prints should not be boiled, only a little rubbing required after soaking. This soap will cleanse clothing as thoroughly as any other without the use of the boiler. We prefer and recommend the boiling process as in itself a cleansing process, saving labor, the wear of the wash-board and being the best disinfectant known, it is easier to boil the dirt out than to rub it out. You can cleanse perfectly the finest fabric without injury; the finest point lace and lace curtains. Soak point lace in hot suds made with this soap, press water out with the hand; boil 15 to 20 minutes in clean suds made with this soap, rinse thoroughly, press carefully between the folds of a towel, roll in a dry towel, and iron between pieces of old flannel. Soak curtains 10 to 15 minutes and boil 15 to 20 minutes, rinse, stretch on frame, or pin every scallop to carpet over a sheet to dry; no ironing required.

Be sure and ask for ELECTRIC-LIGHT SOAP, and take no other.

THE OFFICIAL COUNT.

The Canvassing of the Electoral Vote of New York State to be Begun This Afternoon.

Roscoe Conkling Retained by the Democratic National Committee—Sensible Words from Ex-Senator McDonald, of Indiana.

NEW YORK, November 11.—The Republican National Headquarters are practically closed, but the committee has leased the building until the 15th prox. and will there confer until that date. John Vrooman, of the Republican State Committee, said yesterday that the Democrats claim only 861 in the State and that the Democratic investigation of returns in this city had thus far cut down that number by errors in Mr. Cleveland's favor, leaving only 436.

At the Democratic State Committee's Headquarters, however, the statement was made: "We are all right and are only struggling now to save what is already ours."

The Democrats claim to have received a letter from Indiana alleging that John C. New and others had matured a plan to raise the returns in certain counties, and that in Brown's district, in one county, the returns had been raised some hundreds. It also states that in one precinct in Troy twenty affidavits have been secured tending to prove that more Butler votes were cast than were counted.

Hon. Roscoe Conkling has consented to act as counsel for the Democratic National and State Committees in any question that may arise in relation to the pending canvass. Mr. Conkling was in consultation at the Hoffman House last night with a number of lawyers who are also to appear should there be any occasion. Among the gentlemen present were Aaron J. Vanderpool, James C. Carter, Francis C. Barlow, Franklin Bartlett, Francis L. Stetson, Edward R. Bacon, E. Ellery Anderson, Chas. P. Miller and Francis M. Scott.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. November 11.—Hon. Joseph E. McDonald was shown a dispatch from A. P. Gorman to Chairman Henderson yesterday and had the following to say in regard to the political situation:

"I think that proclamation of Mr. Barnum calling upon Democrats everywhere to fire guns, and, in other respects, treat the election of Cleveland as a settled fact, was all wrong. I think, also, that there was no warrant for an exchange of congratulatory messages between Cleveland and Hendricks and that it would have been better if Blaine had not sent any message announcing the belief that the Republicans had carried New York. My opinion is there ought not to be a single gun fired until the result was finally and officially announced. The vote in New York is altogether too close for either party to claim the State with absolute certainty. This is not the time for inflammatory speeches, but good citizens should be prepared to await quietly and calmly a peaceable settlement of the question by proper authorities. My fear is that if a single gun be fired by either party against the other in any of those demonstrations, it might endanger Federal union, and I think everything should be done to allay party spirit instead of inflaming the public by speeches such as some gentlemen have thought proper to deliver in the last few days.

BUFFALO, November 11.—A special from Albany to the Evening News says: "There is an air of fixed belief here that a bold and unscrupulous attempt is being hatched to count out Governor Cleveland. Leading Democrats in different parts of the State have been telegraphed to increase their vigilance. The employment of William M. Evarts by the Republicans has led to solicitations that Roscoe Conkling be employed to represent the independent Republicans, who are convinced of Cleveland's election. There is considerable uneasiness here. Men talk determinedly and definitely that they will not submit to any fraud or manipulation of the returns. Governor Cleveland is cool and collected. He is watching events now very closely. Yesterday morning several well-known Democratic lawyers were in consultation with Deputy Attorney General Maynard, and every legal precaution is being taken to insure a fair count. It would take but little to precipitate a crisis.

ALBANY, November 11.—A large number of congratulatory telegrams were received by Governor Cleveland yesterday from prominent men throughout the country and many distinguished persons called on him to pay their respects. The Governor was quite busy all day and retired to the Executive Mansion at six o'clock pretty well tired out. He expresses no fears of the result, being assured that the figures already published cannot be materially changed by the official canvass.

PITTSBURGH, November 10.—In an interview this morning with G. M. Laughlin, and another member of the firm of Jones & Laughlin, of which B. F. Jones, Chairman of the National Republican Committee, is senior member, Mr. Laughlin informed a representative of the Leader that no private information had been received by the firm on the situation in New York State since Wednesday last. He says Mr. Jones is a man of the strictest integrity, a very close and careful calculator, and is perfectly satisfied that in no manner could he be influenced or induced to make any statement regarding the correctness of which there was the slightest doubt. "Not only do I believe that Mr. Jones is sincere in his conviction that Mr. Blaine has carried New York State, but that he has the data to base his conviction upon."

BOSTON, November 11.—The total corrected vote of Massachusetts for President and Governor was as follows: President, Blaine, 143,436; Cleveland, 119,240; Butler, 23,866; St. John, 10,200. Total, 296,742. Blaine's plurality, 24,196; opposition majority, 9,870. For Governor, Robinson, 155,097; Endicott, 108,260; McCafferty, (peoples candidate) 23,552; Seelip (pro.) 8,241. Robinson's plurality, 46,837; Robinson majority, 15,044.

ALBANY, N. Y., November 11.—The State Board of Canvassers to canvass the vote of each county will meet in the Secretary of State's office at Albany at noon Wednesday, November 19, and it may take five days for them to complete their work, adjourning over from day to day. This will all depend on whether there is any controversy before the Board. As matters look now, there will be controversies.

NEW YORK, November 10.—General Barlow, one of the lawyers representing the friends of Cleveland in the matter of securing an honest count in this State, said today the situation was simply this: A plurality of the immense vote of this State was confidently claimed for Cleveland and it was probable that in most cases this claim was based on the certified copies of election returns which were filed with the clerks. It would be only natural to suppose that after the returns had been examined and counted over and over again for four or five days there would be no difference in the results obtained by honest men familiar with figures. The fact was, however, that the totals announced by the newspapers friendly to Cleveland showed a variance of several hundred votes from each other, leaving the claims of the Blaine managers out of the question. This being the case it was not impossible that the results of the official canvass would differ somewhat from some of the returns most generally accepted, but any changes were as likely to be in favor of Cleveland as of Blaine, and the former had a margin of from 1,000 to 1,200 or more votes to draw upon. As to the result of the examination of the returns of the city presidential vote made by himself and other lawyers, General Barlow said that his associates did not think it advisable to announce their exact figures. He would say, however, that they made some changes in the vote on both sides, but the difference did not cause any material alteration in the vote as commonly announced, and that it was nothing like the 425 claimed in favor of Blaine.

The Mail and Express says: "The members of the Republican National Committee are still unwavering in their belief that Blaine has received a plurality of the votes in this State. They await with perfect composure the result of the official canvass which will be begun in the sixty counties at one p. m. to-morrow. They advise all Republicans to be cool and temperate in action and language and to avoid any exhibition of an inflammatory character. The Democratic scare-crow about altering returns is the silliest nonsense. The returns were filed in the offices of the clerks of the several counties four days ago, and the only alterations now possible is the judicial revision to which both parties must bow. The developments of the past twenty-four hours indicate even better prospects for Blaine than did those of Saturday."

The missing returns of the Twenty-fourth Election District of the First Assembly District has been found. It was unearthed to-day in the Mayor's office among the tally lists which are required to be deposited there. It was left there by mistake by one of the poll clerks on the day after election. The arrested inspectors are not out of trouble yet, however, as the return just found makes only two filed, while the law says three shall be filed. The return found agrees precisely with the figures already published. The envelope was sealed and intact and the return was correct, except that no vote whatever appears opposite the names of the candidates for City Comptroller. The imprisoned inspectors will be arraigned before Judge Duffy in the Tombs this afternoon and remanded until to-morrow. They will then probably be discharged, as they are only guilty of negligence.

Everything is in readiness for the commencement of the official canvass of the votes by the Board of Aldermen, sitting as a Board of Supervisors, to-morrow. The Aldermen will meet at noon to-morrow in the County Clerk's office and organize as a Board of Supervisors, be sworn in and proceed to the City Hall. Some forty clerks will be appointed, as the work this year is very heavy, and the name of each Presidential elector will have to be called out and will consume a great deal of time. The law provides that the canvass shall be completed and transmitted to the Secretary of State within twenty days after election day. It is not probable that any of the votes will be canvassed to-morrow as the board will only organize and make its appointment and map out the work for each succeeding day. Messrs. Miller, Vanderpool, Barlow, Stetson and Stickney will be present during the canvass to guard the interests of the Democrats. The Republicans will probably have William M. Evarts, Clarence A. Seward, General Tracy and Colonel Bliss to see that there is a fair count for Blaine and to meet any objections or legal points that may arise. The canvass will occupy at least ten days, provided no legal complications arise.

DEATH OF AN EMINENT DIVINE.

Rev. Charles F. Barnard, a Well-Known Minister of Boston, Passes Away, Aged Seventy-six Years.

BOSTON, November 11.—Rev. Charles F. Barnard is dead, aged seventy-six. He was a member of the famous 1829 class at Harvard, having for classmates Robert C. Winthrop, Geo. S. Hillard, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Thomas B. Fox, Henry Bowditch, James Freeman Clarke and others. He was a life-long pastor in Boston. He started the first chapel for the children of his neighborhood, and in a month he joined his school to that of Rev. John Pierpoint in the Hollis Street Church, he officiating. He forecast the social element in churches of the present time in a day when no other church or Sunday school in Boston, perhaps in the United States, included in its plan a parlor and playroom with walls covered with classic engravings. He opened a large free public library in the chapel, which, until the opening of the city public library was widely useful. His early efforts in those directions made it easy many years later for the Young Men's Christian Association and Union to succeed. He was also the originator of the Boston public garden and founder of the first public hot house. He originated the American Social Science Association and was instrumental in forming many other philanthropic societies.

Again Shut Out.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., November 11.—The Baltimore & Ohio Express Company has been again denied means of exit from New York City by a notification from the Erie and American Express companies, which by virtue of previous contracts with the Rochester & Pittsburgh Company, control the traffic on the latter road. The Baltimore & Ohio had commenced running a fast freight from New York to this city over the West Shore, thence over the Rochester & Pittsburgh, and the Pittsburgh & Western to New Castle, where it reached the B. & O., but this leaves the B. & O. without facilities of getting freight out of New York westward.

Frank Hurd Will Contest the Election of Romeis.

TOLEDO, O., November 10.—Frank Hurd said yesterday that he has decided to contest the election of Romeis. He says there is one error of 99 in Erie County, and that he knows of 51 in Lucas County. He now feels satisfied that he was legally elected.

Time is Money.

The harrowing pain of Rheumatism the spending of money, sometimes even to the last dollar, for useless medicines, are bad enough, dear knows. But many cases are aggravated, if not made desperate, by the fact that the sufferer is mind-sick over loss of time, which he cannot afford. Just here the merits of ATHLOPHOROS are most forcibly proved. It operates directly and speedily, and saves time and money which would otherwise be wasted in vain experiments with worthless medicines.

Catarrh.

Is a very prevalent and exceedingly disagreeable disease, liable if neglected, to develop into serious consumption. MABLEY'S

GLORIOUS SUCCESS.

The unparalleled run on Mabley's Bankrupt Bargains the past week has set the town a talking; certain merchants are green with envy at our bustling, rushing business and wonder why they can't get a share of it. They say it is a shame that we should cut down prices so low that they cannot make a living. We are only exercising a privilege this glorious Republic extends to all—that is, conducting our own business after our own methods.

OUR BANKRUPT BARGAINS

Were purchased from large wholesale firms in the east, who recently failed. Mr. Mabley bought them from 40 to 60 Cents on the Dollar—that is on the original cost of manufacture, so you can see we can sell them lower than other houses own their goods for and yet make a satisfactory profit. Instead of merchants complaining about us they should thank us, for we bring trade here from every county in the district, from all over the state, and as we cannot possibly wait upon them all we afford grumbling merchants a chance of catching those we hav'nt time to wait upon. If they would mark their goods at a fair margin and work of sell more of them they might in time gain some recognition from the people.

We Work for all we Get

And give the people full value for their money.

We received 25 more large cases of those Bankrupt Goods last week, and this week we intend to offer greater "Drives" than ever. Last week we had a tremendous rush, the goods seemed to "walk away." Our sales were far ahead of the corresponding week of last year. We sold last week $5.400, $5.400.

This is more than twice as much as any other clothing house in the city received.

We are well prepared for a similar rush this week. Below are a few specimen prices which we will guarantee full 20 per cent. below other dealers' cost prices. Remember these are

HOLLOWAY HICKUPS.

Oscar Johnson is suffering with a couple of fractured ribs caused by falling through the feed hole in the barn and striking on the end of some boards.

Henry Brocket fell down the stairs in Wm. Doty's barn, last week and bruised himself up a little, just to help the doctor probably.

Last Wednesday P. M. Lossing was engaged in building a scaffold over his barn floor, when a piece of timber seven inches square and fourteen feet long, fell to the floor, striking his little boy four years old. Strange to say the boy was not seriously injured except his hand. Dr. Begel was called and found it necessary to put in eighteen stitches to get it in shape. He is now doing well.

Rev. Vaughan and wife attended District quarterly meeting at Milan Saturday and Sunday last.

David Reed has vacated the Soper house and the owner, Conrad Atwell, expects to move in soon.

Prof. Parker, the great mesmerist, has come and gone and no one to shed a tear. Wonder what vagabond will come along next and want the school house to exhibit in. Pity we have not got a cooler to put tramps in.

Strong talk of organizing a society for the prevention of cruelty to children. Who will take the lead?

And now comes another enterprise in the shape of a corset factory. Mrs. Dunham having purchased the right to manufacture a new style of corset has commenced on a small scale, but expects to enlarge her business in the near future, so we are informed. She already has agents canvassing for her who are meeting with good success, as it is an article that recommends itself and sells on sight. Success to you, Mrs. D.

H. E. Wilson is again on the war path with blood in his eye. He has just returned from Buffalo and is loading up again. We always knew that Ersk was sandy.

Mrs. Wm. Fowler was quite seriously injured on Friday last by being thrown from a buggy while out riding. She was taken home and Dr. Begel called, who found her suffering from a broken arm, besides numerous bruises of a less serious nature. The Doctor reports her very comfortable and doing well at present.

Last Saturday morning John Bond and wife concluded that they had traveled life's pathway together as long as was profitable and concluded to quit. Mrs. B., took the train for Adrian and John stayed to keep the house in running order. The talk is that a certain fat man in navy blue is slightly mixed up in the scrape.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

Saturday evening after election was so close to glory that bon-fires were kindled and anvils fired, but Sunday stopped the glee. It had not cooled much when Monday night came, and exercises were resumed in a style to encourage the bashful. All the people who ever buy a yard of tape here, came to town, and the rest stayed for fun. Lights a-park, a-low, and a-loft, glistened wherever democrats hang out a business motto or set up a kitchen range, and some say Frank Cook put a night lamp under the stairs as a glimmer of the recess to come to the vanquished. The Cook's and Sheridan's jubilated with all sorts of colored fireworks on Main street, and sent the news as high as rockets could carry. Children paraded with torches, and raised Sam as they pleased, so there were plenty of escapades too comic to print. Some of the republicans forgot or forgave and took part in the game, while others enjoyed the hub-bub good naturedly.

Quiet followed, and then the school exhibition filled the hall with company. Where all commit their lessons to memory perfectly, it seems almost unjust to select any for special commendation, and this was a case where none required prompting. Some had chosen pieces in accordance with their natural proclivities. Star Crowel and the five cucumbers, was a good sample. Anna Sheridan sang both solos sweetly, though much afraid, and Mamie Shuart recited a story of Fredricksburg with good voice and natural manner. Louis Ladd and Matie Adams spoke the comic medley that won loud applause. The closing piece, Pussy Cats are everywhere, in which several little, and some large children took part, was too cute for anything. In such, Willie Miller always forgets he is not proprietor of the show, and leads the choir.

The rink will be dedicated next Saturday night, and then, heart-burn will be epidemic.

ONSTED ODDS.

School commenced in district number five on Monday last, with F. D. Avery teacher.

C. L. Greenleaf has gone to Saginaw. We hear that he intends to spend the winter in that vicinity.

M. P. Wemple intends to visit his old home, near Cleveland Ohio, in a few days. Expects to be gone about ten days.

Martin Taylor has sold his harness shop to William Parsons and returned to Rome Center.

Henry Sickner, John Secor, Harris and Evans have each moved into their new houses. Jerome Snow will move into his in a few days.

A. S. Dewey, of Cambridge, was in town last Saturday looking at property here, with a view of purchasing and coming here to go into the mercantile business.

Wilson Lee has his store nearly completed. He has purchased a stock of boots and shoes and expects them this week. Mr. Lee expects to keep a good assortment, and sell goods at low prices.

J. E. Gibbs has added much to the appearance in front of his store by grading and drawing gravel. He has also improved the inside by putting up shelves etc.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

Somewhat of a squaw winter.

Lots of wood going up to town.

The old people say it has been a long time since they saw as fine fall weather as there has been this fall.

Mr. Philip Parks started for his home in Clinton Co. for a visit Saturday of last week.

Mrs. Sarah Rappleye and Master Lawrence Rappleye arrived home Wednesday morning from their stay in Dakota the past summer.

Mr. Weddie Bush left for his home in Brooklyn N. Y. on Wednesday of last week.

Burt Morley & Co. shipped two car loads of hogs from the station on last week Thursday for Buffalo.

Miss May Weatherwax, of Adrian, has been visiting Miss Vina Underwood and calling on friends here for the past week.

Miss Ella Hand, of Macon, was the guest of G. C. Arner over Sunday.

Misses Ella Cadmus and Ada Linn, attended the Missionary convention at Adrian Wednesday and Thursday of last week, as delegates.

A. R. Arner spent a few days at Jerome with Agt. Frank Allen.

The poles for a telegraph line to Mr. R. Cadmus' residence north of the village will be set in a few days. Then Bertie won't have to go home for his dinner.

The church social will give an Oyster supper in the Lecture room of the church next week Friday night. Supper 25 cts. A cordial invitation to all.

The members and all interested in a Literary the coming winter are requested to meet at the church two weeks from Friday evening to elect officers.

Mr. and Mrs. Warren Jones came home from Brooklyn N. Y. Tuesday noon where they have been visiting friends. Mrs. Jones is now on the sick list.

Our village school is running along smoothly under the management of Supt. Wm. Stewart and assistant Miss Kittie Clark. We wish them every success and guarantee the support of the entire Dist. the coming winter.

The young ladies of the village and vicinity were invited to spend the afternoon with Miss Fannie Swab at the home of Miss Ella Hall, last Saturday, and report a pleasant time. Never mind boys, it will be our turn next year and then I wonder who will get left.

Ed. Ludlow, while driving Mr. Wm. Barrett's team, one of which was a colt, had a runaway. He being so under the influence of strong drink, could not get them stopped until they ran two miles. There was no damage done however.

Mrs. Dr. DeMott, of Flint, has been visiting old friends here the past few days. She taught the village school here upwards of fifty years ago, when G. W. Jackson's shop was the school house. She was then known as Miss Zelinda Holloway, a sister of the late Butler Holloway, of Holloway station Raisin. The Doctor was the physician here thirty years ago and lived where E. C. Van Vleet's new house now stands.

The Union Club met at the home of Lyman Hause last Saturday night and the following officers were elected:

Pres.—Hon. G. P. Waring.

Committee on Music.—Geo. Gripton, Wm. Nivison, Miss. Ella Jackson, Louisa Arner and Ida Arner.

The author of last weeks Macon music is evidently dying very hard. He says "Now that the democrats have been generally successful it behoves political prohibitionists to stand by the democracy and endeavor to keep it in power." His condition must be something the same as the young dutchman who was found kicking his father's corpse. When repremanded he replied "I feels so pad mit grief dat I must do somethings for relief." It must excite sympathy even from a "political prohibitionist" to see an ardent of the g. o. p. kicking its remains by advising the coming great political organization "to stand by the democracy."

MACON MUSIC.

Henry Jacobus and wife, of Ingham Co., visited friends in Macon, last week.

Macon has its wonders. Last week a dwarf elephant made its appearance at the corners. Whether its coming was ominous remains to be seen. Its advent was really strange, but its exit was still more strange. In its hurried departure it lost its trunk, which was found by an officer of the law in the forest adjoining the village.

"A merciful man will be merciful to his beast." The members of the Reformed church, believing this doctrine, are building sheds at their church.

Will Chambers, who has been spending several months in Macon, left for his home in Vassar, Tuesday.

Mr. Spencer, of Raisin, was in Macon last week on business.

The next S. S. concert will be held at the M. E. church one week from next Sunday evening. The program will consist of readings, declamations, essays and music.

Mr. Jourdan left for Sorrento, Florida, last week. He goes with the hope that a change in climate will be beneficial to his health.

Miss Estella Miller has been engaged to teach the Hammond school, Saline, this winter. She taught a fall term in the same district.

A few evenings since, an individual representing himself (?) to be a cigar maker was seen on our streets. He (?) engaged to board with one of our citizens, and afterwards made one or two other calls. Since, if seen at all, he (?) must have been transfigured. Who can divulge the mystery? Wonder if Joe can?

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

Mr. Barnes who preached at the Congregational church on Sunday last is a young man of fine abilities. His preaching was of high order and he made a very favorable impression among the people and we hope the church will extend him a call to become permanent Pastor.

We are of the opinion after hearing the people talk, that our new postmaster, when the time for a change comes, will be either Sam or Wm. Rose. We hope so.

Mr. George Calhoun, in his efforts to procure a well of water, came near getting an artesian well, having obtained plenty of water at a depth of one hundred and thirty-five feet.

We notice on our street Rev. Mr. Bruce, of Syracuse, brother of our townsman Aaron Bruce. He will visit his friends here for a few days.

This fine weather brings a good many people to town, which from the appearance indicates that the said people appreciate Clinton as a place to buy goods. Our merchants report business good.

W. S. Kimball, who bought a part of the old Kies farm this fall, has already commenced business on said piece of land, and his labors already show in the altered appearance of the land in the way of new fences and a cleaning up of rubbish and stones, that Mr. Kimball knows how to farm as well as keep books. May he succeed in making his farm pay.

The corn social at the Baptist church on Tuesday evening last, was well attended and a success financially. The tables, when set, show that the ladies of the Baptist church know and understand the culinary art.

Mr. Thomson, of Detroit, special agent of the Massachusetts Mutual life insurance company, has been in our village during the fore part of this week, assisting their local agent, S. Brown, of this place, who, we understand is doing quite a business in life insurance, having obtained a number of applications during this week.

The pie social at the Methodist church on Thursday night of this was largely attended and all were served pie in large quantity and great variety and we were somewhat surprised to see some of our friends eat pie, not by the piece but whole pies.

Mrs. Ogden, wife of Rev. Ogden of Baptist church joined her husband on Saturday last. She was detained by sickness for several days at Monroe. She is now getting better.

Our newspaper that we spoke of some time ago made its appearance on Monday last. It is a nice little five column paper and is quite newsy. It will appear again in two weeks. Let it come.

Our Drain Commissioner Bruce has just surveyed and located a drain that he has designated as the O'Reily drain in the east part of this township. The commissioner reports the water better in that vicinity with no miasma in the neighborhood. Consequence head clear and business satisfactory. Success to our commissioner in his efforts to find pure and living water.

TIPTON TOPICS.

The depot is still an uncertainty.

Now that the official count has been ascertained, there is no more chance for wagers or argument on the question of who is who. The Prohibs. have to take the blame.

The Cleveland ratification at Tipton on Saturday night which was not held until the most sanguine of the opposition had given up the conundrum was a rattling affair. Anvils were fired, the band played some good pieces, and by the light of a huge bonfire S. C. Stacy looked down on a good sized audience and assured them that the old ship of state would still continue to glide majestically on notwithstanding that the crew who had mained her for twenty-four years, would on the 4th of next March be relieved from duty.

As the days shorten the cold strengthens, and as the nights lengthen Jack Frost gets in his work. We were never good at quoting proverbs, but think we have heard the oldest inhabitant make remarks of this kind.

The work on the new telegraph line which is being extended from Geo. Knapp's through Tipton and west to Jas. Kimball's residence, is progressing.

A very serious accident occurred on Tuesday of this week, Mrs. Carrol Roberts, in company with Carrie Miller, a girl who had been living with her, were on their way home from Adrian. When near S. Wheeler's place their horse became frightened by one owned by Chas. Teachout, which was running away. This caused Mrs Robert's horse to run and both the ladies were thrown from the buggy, and it is said Mrs. Roberts has received such injuries that she is still unconscious, and can hardly recover, while Miss Miller is also severely hurt.

The Great Exposition.

The Exposition at New Orleans is attracting the attention of the press in all parts of the country and abroad. Almost every newspaper has something to sky about the preparations that are being made to further the work of State or local associations. The special representatives of the Exposition commissioned by President Arthur, for the purpose of procuring exhibits have found the newspapers ready to report speeches and print the latest news relating to the World's Fair. This circumstance no doubt springs from the fact that the people throughout the land read with much interest all that is printed concerning this great enterprise. By the widespread influence of the press the Exposition is known and talked about in India, Australia, on the banks of the Congo, in the South American republics, and in the frozen regions of the North. Seeming impossibilities have been overcome, and the scheme limited to a cotton exhibition at first, has been enlarged by degrees till it now embraces a grand exhibition of arts, manufactures, mines, agriculture, and in fact about everything in which the people of to-day are interested. This Exposition is to be opened in December next, covers more ground, has more exhibits entered, than can be recorded of any other World's Fair ever attempted.

Aside from the pecuniary means furnished, the untiring industry of its directors, this marvel of the nineteenth century owes much of its renown to the power of the newspapers.

AT A FASHIONABLE RESORT.

Belinda Smith met Nelly Brown,
One lovely summer day.
[illegible]
And thus to her she said:

"I'm happy as the little bird
That carols in the tree,
I'm happy as the butterfly
That flutters through the lea."

"What makes you feel so happy, dear?
Said pretty Nelly Brown:
"Is it your lovely Gainsborough,
Or Mother Hubbard gown?"

"Oh, no," Belinda then replied,
In tender dulcet tones:
"But since last night I've been engaged,
You know, to Harry Jones."

"What Harry Jones?" cried Nelly Brown
As mad as she could be:
"Why, since last Thursday at the hop
He's been engaged to me."

FISHES THAT BUILD NESTS.

Secrets of the Sea and Its Queer Finny Creatures—Beds of Gleaming Bubbles Built Upon the Surface of Tropical Oceans—Fishes that Photograph Seaweed on Their Sides.

In a dark corner of the Philadelphia Academy of Sciences may be seen a curious, dark-colored, oddly-shaped fish, imprisoned with a mass of seaweed in a flask of alcohol. The seaweed is covered with white, oval dots, and the label on the bottle reads autenarias. "What do you make of it?" inquired the writer of a friend who was also going the rounds, and who was something of a naturalist. "It isn't very attractive to look at," was the reply, "but it is one of the most interesting of the nest-building fishes."

"So fish build nests?" said a listener. "A great many do," was the reply; "in fact, the fishes are the birds of the sea. The first time I ever saw this fish alive," continued the naturalist, "I was on a schooner bound from Nassau to Key West, and one day there being no wind, a 'dead calem,' as the skipper called it, I had the boat lowered and went over to a large patch of gulf-weed that was floating near at hand. It was the curious sargassum—that goes to make up the so-called Sargasso Sea—and was the abiding place of myriads of curious animals. I soon had a fine collection of crabs and mollusks—all of which were wonderfully marked with the exact hue and tints of the surrounding weed—a provision of nature called mimicry. I was leaning over the stern of the boat with my eyes within a foot of the surface when I observed a slight movement on the part of what I supposed to be a piece of weed, and, thinking there was a crab beneath, I placed my hand beneath it, and to my astonishment, I lifted out an autenarias, this same fellow, or one of his tribe, that is before us. So remarkable was its protective resemblance that I had not observed it, although it was within two feet of me, in fact it seemed to be covered with photographs of the surrounding weed, the blotches of yellow, olive and brown being faithfully copied by the artist of nature.

"As you see in this specimen, the head, fins, the upper or dorsal surface, were all ornamented with dangling barbels of flesh that were exact in their imitation of the sargassum. Thinking that there might be another near at hand, I thrust my hand into the weed and in a moment, disengaged from the rest of the weed a round ball about the size of a base ball. I took it aboard and found it was the nest of the fish. It was made up of bits of weed, wound round about with strings of a jelly-like secretion, evidently from the body of the fish, and all over the leaves and in the interior were fastened the oval white eggs of the builder. I afterwards found many more that ranged in size from an ordinary ball to a foot-ball, but they were all made in the same way, and the fish was, as a rule, lying upon its side on the top of the nest or not far away. The young, when first hatched, find shelter in the interior of the nest, and do not leave it until they are well able to care for themselves.

"Nest-building fishes are by no means rare. Our common stickleback is a well-known example. I have a pair now in my aquarium that are making a nest, that is, the male is, as the female has nothing to do with the domestic arrangements. When the breeding season comes on the male assumes a nuptial garb, is highly colored with pink and red tints, and is so ferocious that few fishes escape from its attacks. The nest is placed either on the bottom or suspended from some rope or twig that hangs overboard, and, having selected the location, the little housekeeper begins to collect sticks and twigs of various kinds after trying them to see if they will float or sink. These are arranged upon the bottom in a regular row and often held in place by stones or pebbles. The foundation completed, the sides are erected, and finally the top is laid on in the same methodical manner.

"When the nest is placed together in this way, the male swings round about it, pressing its abdomen to the sides. If you were near enough you would find that it was winding the nest round about with a thread-like secretion that it took from a pore in the abdomen. Just as in the case of this authenharius, this holds the nest in shape. Now the spindle shaped builder commences a series of rushes, seemingly with the intention of tearing it down again. This is repeated again and again until the fish fairly breaks through the net, and forces a tunnel through the center. This is the finishing touch, and the female is now hunted up and driven into the opening, where she deposits her eggs. This over, the male drives her out, and takes his place over them, fanning them with his fins, and guarding them against enemies of all kinds. This watchful care is kept up until they are hatched, and the young can take care of themselves.

One of the most remarkable nests is built by the Paradise fish of Eastern waters. These are beautiful fishes, decorated with tints of many hues, and actually resembling birds of Paradise. When the nest-building time comes around the fish approaches the surface, takes a bubble of air, carries it below the surface, and then releases it inclosed in a covering of saliva, so that it rises to the surface and appears like a soap-bubble. Another is added to it, and soon a raft of them is seen rising, half an inch in height and sinking several inches beneath the surface. This air-bubble raft catches the rays of the sun during the day, gleaming with iridescent hues, and at night is brilliantly luminous; in fact, a veritable fairy palace.

"[illegible] they are hatched, when the young feed at first upon the soft portions of their nest, moving away only when it falls apart, leaving them at the mercy of whatever enemy may come along. These examples compare with the nests of some of the grebes that have floating nests, and the birds that swing them from the limbs. The fishes that erect nests upon the bottom, however, are in the majority. One of the most interesting is that of the gourami, of the eastern waters of Asia. It is considered a fine food fish, and immense sums have been spent in introducing it to other waters. It attains a length of six feet, but the general size is about two feet and a half.

"In the breeding season the male commences to collect plants much after the fashion of the stickleback, and carries them to some spot where it weaves them into a round ball, leaving a rude opening in the interior for the reception of the eggs. The young come out in good time and are for a long time protected by the male, who follows them up when they attempt to leave the nest, drawing them with its mouth and electing them again into the homestead. Finally, however, they outgrow the patience of the father, and the nest is soon deserted and torn down.

"Many of the fishes build nests like the gulls', mere hollows in the sand or pebbles. Such a nest-builder is the toad fish, that deposits its young in a little hollow and watches over them carefully until they hatch. Long afterwards, the young cling to the rocks about the parent by their egg sacs.

"The salmon deposits its eggs in a shallow depression, as does the trout and various members of the family. The curious lump-fish that is common off our Eastern coast erects a rude nest for its eggs and watches over them until they are hatched. Then the young fasten themselves by their suckers to the mother, and are so carried about, later following her like a brood of chickens. This habit of following the mother is rarely observed among fishes, but is a trait of the catfish, the young of which follow it in a regular swarm.

"One of the most interesting of the nest-builders is the lamprey eel, common in many of our Eastern waters. In this case the male and female both attend to the work, which can readily be observed in running streams. The nest is made up of stones that the eels collect from far and near with their sucker-like mouths. They swim up against the current, fasten upon a stone, and make no attempt to drag it, merely lifting it from the bottom by a convulsive movement, the current moving it down stream toward the location selected for the nest. If the pebble is too heavy, perhaps both eels will take hold, lifting together, until finally the stone is deposited on a pile of others. This is carried on until a heap, perhaps three feet high, is collected, and among them the eggs are deposited and guarded, the young fish that do not resemble their parents living in their "castle" for a long time.

"The nest of the striped dace, a fresh water fish, is almost similar; both the fishes form it by collecting small pebbles which they carry in their mouths and drop one upon another until quite a heap is the result. Among these the eggs are deposited and the young reared.

"The fishes commonly known as suckers—found in many streams—have a similar way of making a home, and, from the habit of carrying stones in their mouths, are called 'stone-toters,' 'stone-tuggers,' etc. The common pond fish is a famous nest-builder. In the early spring their operations can be watched from a boat, the nest being generally formed near shore. Often several fishes are to be observed clearing away the sticks and grasses at the bottom, carrying them some distance away in their mouths. This work accomplished, a slight depression is made or scooped out in the sand, and in it the eggs are deposited, about which the vines and buds of the pond-lily cling, while overhead will, perhaps, be a perfect canopy of the rich flowers, so that the nest is a perfect bower. I have seen as many as ten different nests in a space of ten square feet, the different owners swimming about as if having perfect faith in the good intentions of their neighbors. They have an enemy, however, in the pirate perch, that often completely routs them, and uses the nest for its own purposes. All the sunfishes are nest-builders, one species building in winter when the streams are frozen over.

"In Eastern waters the famous black goby, that can live hours out of water, erects a nest of the seaweed Sastera, and another fish, known scientifically as the aphiocephalus, erects a complicated structure in which its young are reared.

"Among the South American catfishes a number form rude receptacles for their eggs, and others have curious sacs on their bodies to hold their young. On the Amazon and its tributaries many of the border trees are hung with vines, called Lecines, that grow out over the water, drop down, and, as the end meets the stream, take root and grow. In the tendrils floating matter from up the stream becomes caught, and soon a floating garden is the result. Under these a little fish, called the perae, takes its place during the breeding season and here the eggs are placed.

"The giant ceradotus, recently discovered in Australia and famous for its dry land journeys, builds a nest in the sand quite as perfect as that of some birds. So with the protopterus, which forms a nest, and curiously enough, when the dry season comes, burrows in the mud, forming a case lined with a secretion that hardens like plaster and in which cell the fish hibernates until the water comes again. These curious cases have been taken to Europe and there soaked out after a long journey in a closely packed trunk.—Philadelphia Press.

Death in the Dish-Rag.

Years ago I was impressed with an article written upon this subject, and I have had it brought to my mind many times since. While I cannot say, from personal knowledge, as the writer of that article did, there is actual "death in the dish-rag," I can say that there is actual filth in a good many dish-rags. And what is more surprising, such a cloth is often found in the hands of a [illegible] housekeeper, and who is usually an excellent house-wife in most other respects. I have known women who kept all their best and most comfortable rooms closed from the use of the family, for fear of having something soiled, and who would make you feel most unwelcome were you to leave a print of mud on the floor, or a scratch on the wall or furniture; yet they will use, or permit to be used, dish-rags for weeks at a time, without washing or boiling them, until they are stiff with filth. To say the least, it is not pleasant to think of eating off dishes washed with such a cloth. Such careless habits are entirely without excuse, even among the poorest; for it is not necessary to have a number of cloths, if one is willing to make a judicious use of soap and water. But why a subject of so much importance should be overlooked by women who could afford to buy all the linen they need, and who are, at the same time, scrupulously clean in other things, still remains a mystery to me. However, bad habits, long practiced, have a wonderful effect upon us, and often from home-training, we persist in following in the old groove, failing to see the injurious effects, until our attention has been called to it by others, and even then it is difficult to turn some from the old path, be it ever so crooked. It is most essential then to teach children that "whatever is worth doing at all, is worth doing well."

Next to having food pure and free from all dirt, is the importance of having clean dishes, and, above all, bright knives and spoons. How many housekeepers hang on to the old-German-silver spoons. For my own use, I think brass itself is not much more injurious. Give me tin, wood, iron, white metal, anything, before German-silver, for unless one is extremely careful to keep it always rubbed bright, it is positively dangerous to use it. Carelessness in such things among servant girls has vexed me sorely, and it is my usual custom to burn the dish and stove rags the first thing after I take the work into my hands. I do not mean to say that I imitate the lady who only came down stairs once a week to throw out the stale bread, molded meats and vegetables; but it is very hard for one who has long practiced bad habits, to leave them off in a short time, and, besides, I do not like to tell a girl of the same fault three times a day. Occasionally I find one who is as careful about these things as she is about her other work, but I have observed that this one fault is so common that I can not refrain from writing on the subject. Let me say then to those who have not given much thought to the dish-rag, to consider it well, and remember that all things that have the appearance of cleanliness are not clean, and the use of things that are not clean is not only repugnant to refined tastes, but is often a fruitful source of disease.—M. L. Hinds, in Rural New Yorker.

Methods of Applying Manure.

After careful study and experiment I have adopted the rule of using most of my manure at the surface. The only exception to this rule which I make is when I wish to manure very heavily to permanently enrich a garden plot, and then I plough under a liberal coat of manure and top dress in addition. When manure is to be used for wheat, so convinced am I of the superiority of top dressing that I would not allow a man to draw out the manure before ploughing the land if he would do it for nothing. We want the manure applied to the wheat crop so as to act as quickly as possible, for the wheat has a short time to grow in the fall, and it is important that it get well rooted and make growth enough to protect the roots before winter sets in, and the finer the manure is, and the nearer the surface, the quicker its effects will be on the young crop. I am positive that by fining our manure and using it at the surface we can double its value for the wheat crop.

Another and still more important reason for using manure as a topdressing is that with the manure so applied we have a rich seed-bed for clover, which makes a stand and vigorous growth much more certain than if the manure was ploughed under. I believe clover to be the cheapest and best fertilizer within reach of the farmer, and that the clover will furnish a better condition of soil for a succeeding crop of corn or wheat than the manure does. Using manure as a topdressing on wheat when clover is sown—as I believe it always should be—enables the manure to do double duty. First, it largely increases the wheat crop, and second, it grows a fertilizing crop which requires no heavy hauling or spreading, but is just where the farmer wants it without extra labor. The only objection I have ever heard urged against the practice is the extra labor of fining the manure. In reply to this I would say, first, that the plant can not use the manure till it is thoroughly decomposed; second, we save enough labor in drawing to the field in the reduced bulk and increased ease of handling to largely compensate for this labor; and lastly, this fine manure will cover a much larger area than that which is coarse and lumpy.—Waldo F. Brown, in N. Y. Tribune.

A MARVELOUS STORY

TOLD IN TWO LETTERS.

FROM THE SON: "28 Cedar St., New York, Oct. 28, 1882.

"Gentlemen: My father resides at Glover, Vt. He has been a great sufferer from Scrofula, and the inclosed letter will tell you what a marvelous effect has had in his case. I think his blood must have contained the humor for at least ten years; but it did not show, except in the form of a scrofulous sore on the wrist, until about five years ago. From a few spots which appeared at that time, it gradually spread so as to cover his entire body. I assure you he was terribly afflicted, and an object of pity, when he began using your medicine. Now, there are few men of his age who enjoy as good health as he has. I could easily name fifty persons who would testify to the facts in his case.

Yours truly, W. M. PHILLIPS."

FROM THE FATHER: "It is both a pleasure and a duty for me to state to you the benefit I have derived from the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Six months ago I was completely covered with a terrible humor and scrofulous sores. The humor caused an incessant and intolerable itching, and the skin cracked so as to cause the blood to flow in many places whenever I moved. My sufferings were great, and my life a burden. I commenced the use of the SARSAPARILLA in April last, and have used it regularly since that time. My condition began to improve at once. The sores have all healed, and I feel perfectly well in every respect—being now able to do a good day's work, although 73 years of age. Many inquire what has wrought such a cure in my case, and I tell them, as I have here tried to tell you, AYER'S SARSAPARILLA. Glover, Vt., Oct. 21, 1882. Yours gratefully,

HIRAM PHILLIPS."

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA cures Scrofula and all Scrofulous Complaints, Erysipelas, Eczema, Ringworm, Blotches, Sores, Boils, Tumors, and Eruptions of the Skin. It clears the blood of all impurities, aids digestion, stimulates the action of the bowels, and thus restores vitality and strengthens the whole system.

Danger from Catarrh

That exceedingly disagreeable and very prevalent disease, catarrh, is caused by scrofulous taint in the blood. Hood's Sarsaparilla, by its powerful purifying and vitalizing action upon the blood, speedily removes the cause, and thus effects a radical and permanent cure of catarrh. Those who suffer from its varied symptoms—uncomfortable flow from the nose, offensive breath, ringing and bursting noises in the ears, swelling of the soft parts of the throat, nervous prostration, etc.—should take Hood's Sarsaparilla and be cured.

Serious consequences are liable to ensue if catarrh is not attended to in season. The disease frequently destroys the sense of smell and often developes into bronchitis or pulmonary consumption. Undoubtedly many cases of consumption originate in catarrh. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures catarrh and has even effected remarkable cures of consumption itself, in its early stages. A book containing statements of many cures by Hood's Sarsaparilla, will be sent free to all who send address to C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

The Best Medicine

"I have suffered with catarrh in my head for years, and paid out hundreds of dollars for medicines, but have heretofore received only temporary relief. I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla and now my catarrh is nearly cured, the weakness of my body is all gone, my appetite is good—in fact, I feel like another person. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best medicine I have ever taken." MRS. A. CUNNINGHAM, Providence, R. I.

Catarrh and Impure Blood

"Hood's Sarsaparilla has helped me more for catarrh and impure blood than anything else I ever used." A. BALL, Syracuse, N. Y.

"I suffered three years with catarrh, and my general health was poor in consequence. When I took Hood's Sarsaparilla I found I had the right remedy. The catarrh is yielding, as Hood's Sarsaparilla is cleansing my blood, and the general tone of my system is improving." FRANK WASHBURN, Rochester, N. Y.

Sufferers from nervousness, early decay, etc., if you value life, avoid advertising doctors and medicines that act on kidneys and liver. Be not deceived by the many bogus certificates of cures from paid or imaginary persons. If a weakness of the sexual system is the cause of your distress, Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla will strengthen the parts affected, stop the drain, quiet the nerves, produce dreamless slumber and allow you to regain perfect health. It has cured thousands, and will cure you, for, by purifying the blood and strengthening every weak portion of the body, it removes every symptom of distress.

What Common Sense Does.

Common sense is symmetry of mind, character, and of purpose in the individual combined. It represents man in completeness, harmony, and equipoise. It clothes him with dignity, invests him with power, and stamps him with superiority. It is not genius, for that is often erratic; nor cunning, in its sinuous course; nor tact, with its decline into trickery. Common sense is the embodiment of true manhood. It confers a patent of royalty, though birth be plebian, and exalts men from their lowliest spheres to the highest stations. Not by sudden freaks of fortune or a train of adventitious circumstances are they thus dignified; but step by step, through obstacle and hindrance, they overcome by force of character and the proper force of will power. Common sense is a tremendous force in this lower world. Its power is felt and acknowledged through all the ramifications of governments, society, business, finance science and commerce. In fact it is the history as well as the true philosophy of the ages. It is the salt that has saved humanity from barbarism, and the moving power that has propelled the race onward in its march of progress and civilization.

The pain and misery suffered by those who are afflicted with dyspepsia are indescriable. The distress of the body is equalled (or surpassed) by the confusion and tortures of the mind, thus making its victims suffer double affliction. The relief which is given by Hood's Sarsaparilla has caused thousands to be thankful for this great medicine. It dispels the causes of dyspepsia, and tones up the digestive organs. Try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Help Yourself.

People who have been bolstered up and levered all their lives are seldom good for anything in a crisis. When misfortune comes they look around for something to cling to or lean upon. If the prop is not there, down they go.

Once down, they are as helpless as capsized turtles, or unhorsed men in armor and cannot find their feet again without assistance.

Such silken fellows, no more resemble self-made men, who have fought their way to position, making difficulties their stepping stones, and deriving determination from defeat, than vines resemble oaks, or sputtering rush-lights the stars of heaven. Efforts persisted into achievements train a man to self-reliance, and when he has proven to the world that he can trust himself the world will trust him.

It is unwise to deprive young men of the advantages which result from their own energetic action by "boosting them over obstacles which they ought to surmount alone.

"Coming events cast their shadow before." DeLand's goods have withstood all tests for thirty years, and the purity and excellence of their Soda and Saleratus show the glorious future for it.

A City of Perfumes.

A writer in All the Year Round says: The Tunisian Arabs have a passion for flowers, and as soon as their spring commences, even the poorest and raggedest may be seen with delicately scented blossom stuck above his ear, the stalk resting amid the folds of his turban and the flower projecting over his dark cheek. I have been told by those who have thirty years' knowledge of these people, that they will, almost go without bread to buy flowers. And there is something in the sight of a gaunt, toil-worn Arab, whose sole garment may consist of a piece of coarse sacking and a ragged old turban, with a bunch of delicate spring blossoms drooping their cool freshness against his swarthy cheek, which stirs a strange mingling of sympathy and pity and admiration.

The perfumes distilled at Tunis have been famous from time immemorial, and I really think the Tunisians are right when they declare that their roses are sweeter than all others. There is one very large, rather pale rose, in particular, from which the famous attar is extracted, which exhales an odor so powerful and yet so delicate that it seems a figure of speech to speak of the "odors of Paradise," and one can understand that the Mohammedan's heaven would hardly be complete without it. But at Tunis it is not only the rose which is made to yield up its sweet breath, to be afterwards imprisoned in cunning little caskets and sparkling crystal flasks enriched with gilding, suggesting to the wandering fancy of the Arabian Nights' haunted traveler (and who is there who is not continually haunted by that wonderful book from the moment he finds himself among Oriental scenes?) the imprisoned spirit of some fairy, in eternal subjection to the powerful genii man. The odors of the violets, jasmine, the orange flower, and many others are extracted with equal skill, and in the bazaars mingle their scents with the perfume of sandal-wood and other sweet smelling woods, whose names I do not know, and with that of the curious most odoriferous dark substance which the natives call amber.

If you go to buy perfumes, the vendor will perhaps offer you a little ivory box (Arabian Nights again!) or porcelain vase containing a scented unguent for the hair, or may be a string of beads to hang around your neck, apparently thinking it of small consequence in what way you perfume your person so that the desired odor is conveyed to the senses. In Arab households incense and sandal-wood are frequently burned on charcoal braizers. The Arabian women of the higher class are extravagantly fond of highly scented earrings, bracelets, etc., and a lady told me that on being introduced into the apartment of a newly married wife she saw suspended on the wall a magnificent kind of necklace, almost as large as a collar of the Order of the Golden Fleece, formed of scented woods and amber, enriched with plates and beads of pure gold, finely worked. This ornament perfumed the whole apartment, and my friend was informed that in well-to-do households it was always to be found in the chamber of the newest wife.

TECUMSEH, MICH., NOV. 20, 1884

THAT venerable personage, the "oldest inhabitant," can scarcely recall a more beautiful fall than the present one.

The Republicans thought the Prohibition shower did not amount to much. It proved to be a powerful cyclone in New York.

Now that the election is over and the result known by all men, let us turn our attention to business once more and make the wheels of industry hum.

President Cleveland should reserve two of the softest offices within his gift for the Rev. Dr. Ball and the Rev. Dr. Burchard. Their services in New York were invaluable to him. But perhaps, after all, they were only Democratic spies in the enemy's camp.

The following significant straw appeared in the telegraphic news last Wednesday:

CLEVELAND, Nov. 15.—The Cleveland rolling mill company will resume work in all its departments on Monday except in the soft steel mill. Not since the strike of '76 has the mill run to its full capacity. The new move gives employment to 3,500 men, an increase of 1,700 over the force formerly employed.

The New York World thinks that Mr. Blaine himself was the author of his defeat:

He came to New York fresh from his triumphal campaign in the west to magnetize things. He was met with a week of gloom and rain. The big out-door parades which had been arranged for were comparative failures. Then came Burchard on that black Wednesday with his fateful "Rum, Romanism, and Rebellion." This was followed by the Belshazzer Banquet with Jay Gould and the millionaires at night. That finished Mr. Blaine. He probably had a plurality in New York on that memorable morning, but when the newspapers of the next day told the story Mr. Blaine was defeated. Thus, may it be again remarked, everlasting things hang on slender threads.

The Philadelphia Record says:

None of our manufacturers are so foolish as to close business because of their disappointment over the defeat of Mr. Blaine. Some of them may have said so during the excitement of the political campaign, but they will think better of it. In 1844 there was much more grief among the manufacturers over the defeat of Henry Clay than there is over Mr. Blaine's defeat, but none of them suspended business on that account. On the contrary many of them extended their operations under the genial influence of a tariff policy that widened the market for their products. When the excessive taxes on the raw materials of industry are removed the manufacturers of Philadelphia will have reason to rejoice over the change, instead of lamenting it and threatening to suspend business operations. Under the existing policy the seasons of business prosperity have been brief and fitful. When the needless burdens of taxation are reduced, and the enormous surplus piled in the treasury is sent through the arteries of trade, a healthy impulse will be given to business in all its departments.

The result of the election by states, after the completion of the official count in New York, remains exactly as stated by the HERALD on Nov. 6th, two days after the election. The result was in no more real doubt then than it is to-day. Full returns had been received from every election precinct in New York through a dozen different sources, and the figures had become public property on Thursday night, two weeks ago to-day. The only element of uncertainty was this—whether the defeated party would accept the inevitable, as law-abiding citizens should, or attempt to repeat the game of 1876. With the completion of the official canvass in New York that fear is now dispelled. That canvass shows a plurality of 1,195 for the lowest Cleveland elector, over the highest Blaine elector. The plurality for Cleveland, on all the electors but two or three, is over 1,200. The remaining states will proceed to count the votes and give the legal certificates to the Cleveland or Blaine electors as the case may be, and the result will be legally and truthfully declared. Cleveland and Hendricks will receive 219 electoral votes; Blaine & Logan will receive 182.

TEMPERANCE DEPARTMENT.

EDITED BY A COMMITTEE OF THE UNION PROHIBITION PARTY.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON MORAL REFORM.

Unanimously adopted by the Michigan Christian Conference, at its session held with the Church of Christ, East Ridgeway, Lenawee County, Mich., Oct. 29 to Nov. 1, '84

We, your Committee on Moral Reform, respectfully report as follows:

The past year having added one more to the dark record of intemperance and high handed iniquity in its thousands of forms, by which homes have been made desolate, hearts broken and souls destroyed, therefore

Resolved, That as a body of Christian people, it is our duty to reiterate in the action taken by your honorable body last year, coupled with that expressed in the report of the committee on Temperance, adopted by the Christian Conference of Ohio, at its late session, which report read as follows:

Whereas, The great evils resulting from licentiousness, the use of rum, profanity, Sabbath breaking, and use of tobacco threaten the ruin of our young people in all parts of our land, and,

Whereas, The Bible no where sanctions these evils nor an allowance with them who promise laws of reform, but who continue to do wickedly for the satisfaction of their own individual interests, therefore

Resolved, That we urge our ministers to do more positive preaching against these great evils and that we ask all lovers of Jesus among us, and all whom we may reach, to agitate the subject of moral reform, and to speak much and constantly against these great evils.

Resolved, That we favor the distribution of tons of publications crying down these great evils, and urging a united effort on the part of all lovers of righteousness in the uprooting of vice and iniquity.

Whereas, Alcohol is the monster of man, against which the legislation of both state and national government has forced prohibition for ages past in certain specific cases, protecting Indians, Slaves, Soldiers, Minors, and protecting certain places, such as schools and camp-meetings; and protecting certain times, such as days of election, danger, riots, and otherwise; and,

Whereas, Those who, through weakness, use it in the indulgence of a depraved appetite, yet prohibit its use by their wives, daughters, and servants, and condemn its use by teachers, ministers, and other persons of high moral standing, thus showing when combining this vote with that of acknowledged temperance people) an almost universal voice for prohibition, and making an unmistakable confession of its justice; and

Whereas, This monster evil is suffered by the whole community at the instance of a small minority, not more than fifteen per cent. of the population having any interest in the continuation of the manufacture or traffic; and the evil is not suffered principally or equally by those who drink, whose senses are stupefied, but more largely by their families and an outraged community, adding, besides all the suffering, at least fifty per cent. to the taxes, and penitentiaries; and

Whereas, The traffic can, at most, be desireable to the few who are willing to risk wrecking their own hopes and the happiness of others; therefore,

Resolved, That common equity and humanity demand the prohibition of this inhuman, barberous, and undemocratic traffic, and further

Resolved, That we not only pledge ourselves to prohibition, but that we will use every wise and honest means for the suppression of the manufacture or use of intoxicating beverages.

B. F. RAPP,
J. A. YOUNG,
GEO. ABBOTT.

P. S.—Since the adjournment of conference, a report has been in circulation to the effect that there was strong opposition to the above report in the discussion and in the vote taken in reference to it. Said report is incorrect. One brother said: "while I most heartily endorse the report in the main, I think the words in the last resolve, 'that we not only pledge ourselves to prohibition,' looks too much like binding the conscience which I think should be left free." When an expression by vote was asked for (which was asked of the entire audience, and by a rising vote,) the vote was unanimous in affirming the report, the brother having made the remarks referred to, casting his vote with the balance. B. F. RAPP.

"This ought ye to have done and not left the other undone."

The fish commissions of Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois and Minnesota met at Milwaukee last night and adopted recommendations to State legislatures to pass laws protecting the fish and fish interests of the Great Lakes.—Evening News, Oct. 18.

Those legislatures will no doubt give heed to these recommendations. The fish are of great importance to this country. But what will they do when asked to pass laws protecting the homes of their States from the depredations of the rum traffic? They will answer in effect, the fish interest does not control votes. The whiskey traffic does. The votes of the people are of more importance to us than their virtues, therefore we will work for the one though we destroy the other? I do not complain that our law makers protect our fish interests. I heartily commend them for so doing, but I denounce them for thin moral cowardness when asked to attend to the more weightier matter of the law. The sanctity of one home, or the saving of one boy from rums destruction, is of infinitely more importance to the welfare of this nation than all the fish interests in the United States; and I hope that the time is not long when the people of this State will give our legislators to understand most plainly that to encourage virtue in the people is vastly more to their credit than to license vice.

J. H. O.

The other day we noticed over the door of a saloon the name "——'s Exchange." The thought came to us it was a place of "exchange" but of what? Honor, respectability, home, wife, children, the earnings representing hours of toil, exchanged for dishonor and disgrace, bloodshot eyes and trembling limbs, vicious companions, and a place in the gutter, an abode in the prison cell, and, it may be the gallows. Terrible are the "exchanges" made over the bar of a saloon.—Royal Templars Advocate.

We challenge the defenders of the liquor business to name one good thing that results from the ordinary consumption of intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

Dear Sir: About eight years ago I began to suffer from a liver difficulty, during the attacks I experienced severe pain, accompanied by what I cannot describe better than by calling it a drawing in sensation. The agony of it was almost beyond endurance. None of the usual medicines employed in such cases had any effect upon me. From time to time I was laid up and unable to attend to my business.

Finally Mr. Lloyd, a druggist of this city, suggested your Favorite Remedy as an excellent thing for the liver. I had not taken the whole of the first bottle before I found decided relief; the pain passed away, and to my delight I regained the power to enjoy and digest my food without the former distress. Nature seemed to be set going again. I cannot express my appreciation of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy than by telling you that since my personal knowledge of its virtues I have recommended it to a great many of my friends and acquaintances.

MACON, Nov. 18th, 1884.

"Looker On" would like the writer of Macon Music in last week's HERALD, to name one prohibitionist who is jubilant over the result of the late election. He says, "no one has reason to be more exultant" than the prohibitionist. Will he please state why? Also how he knows that the object which the prohibitionists had in view, was "to put the democracy in power." Also, why "it behoves the political prohibitionist to stand by the democracy, and endeavor to keep it in power."

For our part we believe and thank God for it, that conscience, and love for their fellows, have induced 200,000 votes, in our beloved land, to squarely and honestly give expression to their earnest desire, that this awful curse and cause of suffering, the drink traffic, may be leagaly removed.

LOOKER ON.

A TECUMSEH MAN ABROAD.

John R. Clark delivered his lecture "To and Fro in London" at Kalamazoo last week. The following flattering notice thereof is from the Kalamazoo Gazette. The lecture was given before the Sherwood Society of the College.

The lecture "To and Fro in London," to which a large audience listened Wednesday evening at the Baptist church, was a fine effort and reflects in high favor upon the earnest labor and relative ability of its author, John R. Clark.

So unbroken is the excellence, both of the lecture and its delivery, that it is difficult to give a satisfactory outline; yet we will note a few points.

The lecturer at once dropped his audience in the streets of the world's metropolis, and soon led them from point to point in St. Paul's, with a vivid and lofty description. Then to London bridge, which knows no end to the stream of humanity passing over it; into the streets and houses almost revered from their having known the presence of such men as Dr. Johnson and Wm. Cowper; to the magnificent temples of worship whose central pillars are Dr. Parker and Charles Spurgeon.

Mr. Clark's eulogies upon John B. Gough, General Grant, Abraham Lincoln and Charles Spurgeon, were ennobling and sublime and did honor to the man who, overlooking all ties of nativity, can appreciate true greatness wherever it is found.

The latter part of the lecture consisted of specimens of recitation in Scotch, English, and Irish dialect, and many incidents of the speaker's early life in London, overflowing with humor and pathos.

A man of two countries, England and America; twice a brightener of the understanding, having been formerly a boot-black, twice a man of letters, news-boy and lecturer. Mr. Clark is at once a delight and a marvel to all who hear him.

TECUMSEH, MICH., NOV. 20, 1884.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

Thanksgiving day next Thursday.

Who will give us a Thanksgiving turkey?

Thanks to Morgan Miller for a batch of San Francisco papers.

Coal stoves are cold stove no longer, and the price of coal is going up.

John R. Clark's new lecture is entitled "Rum, Romanism and Rebellion."

Frank Snedigor and his best girl came up from Dundee Tuesday and returned on Wednesday.

The night Lake Shore train on the Jackson branch of the Lake Shore is now carrying the U. S. express.

The Lenawee Co. teachers association will meet some time in December. The exact date will soon be arranged.

The skating rink is constantly growing in popular favor Under its splendid management it is proving a resort for many of our best society people.

A little advise to our roller skaters. For falls: Rub the part affected with a piece of fresh butter, and it will prevent a bruise or discoloration of the skin.

Business has "picked up" very rapidly in town in the past week. Our merchants are enjoying a rushing trade, and the air of contentment and prosperity pervades the town.

The Democrats and Greenbackers of Tipton had a fine "blow-out" last Saturday evening in honor of Clevelands election. Bonfires were lighted, houses were illuminated and a general good time had.

The poor sufferer who has been dosing himself with so called Troches and thereby upset his stomach without curing his cough, should take our advice and use at once Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup and get well,

Rev. I. A. Eberhart spent two or three days very pleasantly among his Tecumseh friends last week. Mr. Eberhart now lives at Chicago Lawn, a suburb of Chicago, where he has a large number of village lots for sale.

When others are suffering, drop a word of kindness and sympathy. If they are suffering from a cold, give them Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup; a few doses of this valuable remedy will afford instant relief, and a twenty-five cent bottle will cure the worst cough.

Mr. Nestell has sold out his interest in the skating rink to Vincent P. Cash, the other partner, and the latter will have full control of the establishment hereafter. Mr. Cash will continue to run the rink in the unexceptional manner in which it has heretofore been conducted.

Adrian Times: The upper room of the Addison school house has been suffering from a smoking stove, and the Courier advises people to hang their hams there. To do so wouldn't cause much trouble if Addison is so plentifully supplied with hams, figuratively speaking, as some towns are.

Dangerous counterfeit dollars are now cirulating. They are described as being so finely executed as to almost defy detection. They are of a white color, dated 1884, and have a fine, clear and almost perfect ring. The die is excellent, and the size and thickness correspond to the standard silver dollar.

Adrian Times: Yee Din, the Tecumseh washee washee, is entertaining a mongolian cousin who has just arrived from China. It is no end of a picnic to hear Yee Din explain to his countryman that Tecumseh is the most important city in all this Chinaman's plundering ground, because there are more white shirts worn there than anywhere else.

Thursday, Nov. 27, having been recommended as a day of annual Thanksgiving, the Baptist, Presbyterian and Methodist congregations will hold a union service on that day at half past ten A. M. in the Presbyterian church. Rev. C. E. Conley, pastor of the Baptist church, will preach. Members of the united congregations and all who feel disposed to come are invited to join the service.

Brooklyn Exponent: A Napoleon girl in giving her answer "No" to a matromonial proposal, closes her letter with the following peroration: "So live that when thy summons comes to join the matrimonial cara van that moves toward the connubial goal, thou go not like the half paid hired man, begging potatoes, but sustained and soothed by common sense, approach thy doom like one who wraps the cellar door about him and lies down to sweet dreams."

The sale of season tickets for the Library Lecture Course is progressing very satisfactorily. A canvassing committee is at work selling tickets with good success so far. Parties wishing tickets, who are missed by the canvassers, will find them for sale at Adamson's jewelry store. The committee is anxious to dispose of all the season tickets possible to insure the financial success of the course. As the object of the affair is a most laudible one people are requested to lend their aid and buy season tickets liberally.

Thanksgiving one week from today.

Call at the HERALD for your tax receipts.

Adrian will soon have a skating rink. Happy Adrian.

Dr. L. H. Kallock, of Balch, paid the HERALD a call on Tuesday last.

Mrs. John Darling left Tecumseh for Duluth, Wis., yesterday morning.

Mrs. A. Forsyth, nee Mary Eccles, of Dacotah, is visiting friends in Tecumseh.

The buyers are in the field looking up poultry. They say there is not a democratic rooster for sale in the county.

The HERALD was in error last week in giving the name of Wheeler as the manager of the Macon skating rink. Mr. Freeman is the manager.

John B. Pattison of Ridgeway has bought the Vet Erskine house on Potawatamie street and moved his family into the village. Another good family added to the census.

The trial of the celebrated Crouch-Holcomb case is now in progress at Jackson. A jury was secured last week, and the evidence on the part of the people is being given this week.

Fred King and Pulaski King of La Porte, Ind., were in town a couple of days last week, guests of Geo. S. Spafford. Fred is frequently seen in Tecumseh, but his brother has not paid us a visit before in twenty years.

Evening News: A Fort Gratiot man loudly proclaimed that if Cleveland was elected this country would be depopulated. Imagine his supprise when just after he heard of Cleveland's election, his wife presented him with a pair of elegant twins.

Township Treasurers will find it to their advantage to get their tax receipts printed at the HERALD office. Receipts printed in any form desired, with or without stubs, and neatly bound in books. Send in your orders at once as the time is approaching.

Charles R. Henry, an old Macon boy, and now an attorney at Au Sable, has been elected State Senator in the 29th district on the Republican ticket. He has served a term as Prosecuting Attorney of Iosco county most acceptably, His old friends in this vicinity will be glad to hear of his success.

Attention Ladies—To the nice line of felts and trimmed goods, all prices to suit the times. Jersey caps, velvet hats; tinsil bonnets. Also, children's bonnets in a variety of shapes, desirable frames, orders made neat and promptly at Mrs. N. R. Brown's Millinery rooms, over Anderson's Dry Goods Store.

The Detroit Commercial in its issue of Oct. 18, says: "An Adrian republican has an election bet with a lady of that city whereby, in the event of Cleveland's election, he is to trundle her to Tecumseh in a wheelbarrow. If Blaine is elected the gentleman is to have the privilege of riding with the lady to Tecumseh in a buggy."

A. M. Bradley of near Saline, met with a serious accident on Tuesday last. He had hitched up his team at the Exchange barn preparatory to going home, when they started on a run, throwing him out of the wagon and seriously injuring him. He was taken up for dead, but after a few hours revived and was taken to his home.

Geo. S. Tiffany will start for New Orleans in about two weeks, to exhibit his latest tile machines at the World's Exposition there. He will probably remain there two or three months. The exhibit will be a machine now manufactured at Bucyrus, Ohio, and Mr. Tiffany will have charge of putting up the machine and running it a few weeks for the Bucyrus company.

The first Social party given by the "Owl Club" will take place at Armory Hall on Wednesday evening of next week, Nov. 26. Good music will be provided, and no effort will be spared by the members to make it an enjoyable occasion. All our people who are addicted to tripping the light fantastic should attend. The Club will quite likely give other similar entertainments during the winter.

Blissfield Advance: Some evil disposed person or persons Tuesday evening tiped over the pile-driver being used in repairing the west approach to the river bridge, causing it to be very badly damaged. One of the guy-ropes was then tied across the bridge in such a manner that a team coming across stumbled over it one of the horses falling down. Such wretches ought to be given a ride out of town on a fence rail.

The ladies of St. Peter's church will hold their annual bazar and evening entertainment at the Opera House next Thursday afternoon and evening, commencing at 12 o'clock M. Their display of fancy articles is unusually large, varied and fine this year, and admirably suited for Christmas gifts. We hope they will be liberally patronized. The evening entertainment will consist of a drama entitled "Laila", which will be both new and entertaining to young and old. The admission to the evening entertainment will be only 15 cents.

John Trann was in town yesterday. He drops in on his old acquaintances occasionally.

Thanks to Geo. Tiffany for some lithographic views of the New Orleans Exposition buildings.

Landlord Delano, of St. Clair, has closed a lease for "The Patterson" and will soon open the hotel to the public.

Loren Van Antwerp's house on Chicago street caught fire this morning. It was discovered at once and put out before any serious damage resulted.

Geo. Adamson, the jeweler, has taken a large advertising space this week. He has got a corner on the Christmas Presents, and can please all who are looking for something for somebody.

Williams' orchestra of Adrian will furnish the music for the "Owls" next Wednesday evening at Armory Hall, and will give some choice selections from 8:00 to 8:30. Spectator's ticket, 15 cents.

Lenawee County is the banner prohibition county of the State, and the banner county of the Union, with one exception. Allegheny county, New York, cast 44 more votes for St. John than Lenawee did.

Last Sunday at the Exchange Hotel in this village occured the marriage of William P. Carey, of Geneseo N. Y. to Miss Minnie Mertz, of Adrian. The bride is a sister of Mrs. Traudt, the landlord of the Exchange.

Geo. S. Tiffany has just received Letters Patent for a new Clay and Clod Crusher, No. 307,820, issued Nov. 11th, 1884. He calls it "The Masher." He claims this to be the best clay crusher ever invented, and it his design to use it in connection with his latest tile machines.

S. W. Temple has built a new coal shed, and added some new brands to the coal he has heretofore sold: among which is the Massillon Cannel, which is the best coal mined, for domestic uses. Mr. Temple is continually extending his coal trade, which has already grown to large proportions.

Last Tuesday afternoon as Mrs. Carrol Roberts, of Franklin, was coming home from Adrian with her hired girl, the two were thrown from the buggy, and Mrs. Roberts was very seriously injured, having her skull fractured and jaw bone broken. She is still in a critical condition and fears are entertained for her recovery.

Since the above was in type we learn that Mrs. Roberts died yesterday morning at 11:30 at Wm. Green's residence where she was taken after the accident. She remained entirely unconscious until death. The funeral services will be held on Friday morning at 10:30 at Mr. Robert's home in Franklin. The girl who was hurt is improving and is now considered out of danger.

An agent has been appointed to receive orders in this place, and those desirous of purchasing a good book, either for their own home, or to make others glad, should not fail to subscribe. Mrs. S. E. Morse is agent and will be pleased to receive your orders.

ALL THE WAY FROM DAKOTA.

An old reader of the HERALD furnishes the following private letter received from a friend in Dakota.

WINTHROP, DAK., Oct. 5th, 1884.

Please consider this letter beg un and no apologies. My harvest is over, my threshing done. The summer is ended. Geese are plenty. (Frank shot his first one, on the 1st. inst.) We are feeding our hogs wheat and ourselves pumpkin pies, chicken and such game as we have time to shoot. It seems to me that we live fast here, the time goes so rapidly away. Our first frost came on the 23 of Sept. caught us napping—as usual and killed our tomatoes which was a pity. We pulled and piled the vines, and they have been ripening some since. Have had no more frost yet, but can't escape much longer. Corn ripened nicely. I have cribbed about 20 bu. of hard corn. We shall feast on pop corn this winter. I shall have ten or twelve bu. all kinds, red, yellow, and white rice corn. I made an experiment on sweet corn: I planted a black sugar corn, with Stowells evergreen, and the result is a variegated (thats the word) variety with large ears and grains, five eighths of an inch broad, small cob, and a most delicious kind for the table. I will send you a pkg. of seed when it gets thoroughly dry. We succeeded in drying over 120 pounds of sweet corn, and could have dried more but there seemed to be no market for it, and Lide thought we could not use it all. This with six bushels of white beans, I guess will help us to keep fat this winter. Well I raised 258 bushels of oats from 6 acres. 255 bu. of Fife wheat from 15 acres, and 414 of Lost Nation wheat from 25 acres. The L. N. shelled badly when cut. But now with good crops, comes the lowest price for wheat for 25 years. We can get but from 45 to 54cts for wheat, and it requires 62 pounds to make a bushel here on account of imperfect cleaning. One consolation is that flour is cheap, 4,40 a barrel, and groceries generally are very reasonable. Fuel is high. Hard coal 11.25, soft coal $8 per ton. The hail left us mercifully alone this year, though it threatened enough, and actually visited south of Huron, even worse than it did us last year. We saw one cyclone plainly like a tunnel or waterspout, 20 miles to the South of us, visible for half an hour. It was narrow on the ground not over a rod wide, but succeeded in destroying several buildings &c. A small one passed over one corner of my farm, knocked a window out of the school house, unroofed a neighbor's barn, and scared every body. We dove into our cyclone cellar, and peered out at it defiantly. Now for the winter, I have a straw roof on my barn about 16 feet deep. "How is that for high." When the storms rage, should we not be able to feed the horses, they can eat straw for a living, till they eat the roof off from over their heads. Our potatoes are excellent, but not as good as last year, but squash in profusion, and of all kinds. We are loosing some of our good neighbors, as well as some bad ones. This is one great evil in this new country. Some have become tired of a farmers life, some are too roving in their disposition and never intended to stay longer than necessary to acquire a title from the government for land, in order to sell it. I would not advise any one to come here yet, unless for speculative purposes, and a keen speculator can do as well one place as another provided there is plenty of money floating around. People who come here from Iowa and Nebraska say they do not mind the winds nor storms. They are as bad, or worse where they came from. I suppose it is possible to get used to those things. In fact I am less concerned about them than at first, but I always watch an approaching storm cloud with a certain anxiety, and should the gathering clouds assume a whirling motion we "get" for the cellar. It is very singular how storms come up here. There may be a strong wind blowing steadily from the South sometimes for three days. We see a small streak of cloud, half way above the horizon in the northwest. It grows slowly and stretches out in almost a straight line from left to right and appears to be rolling up in a regular wave. When it comes directly toward you, coming always against the wind, it simply means a strong change of wind, and from a warm to a cold temperature, and usually hail. If the bank of cloud moves to the northeast it indicates a storm centre, which if it passes over you will produce winds from all points of the compass within half an hour. In fact a cyclone, or rather whirlwind not yet brought down to a destructive point but gathering and if it does not break up finally concentrates along its eastern course, and does great damage in Minnesota and Iowa. The clouds form here at a great height, and we can see distinctly the rain falling from this dark bank of clouds, outlined upon the clear sky below and beyond it, sometimes for hours before it reaches us. When the cloud finally reaches us, the south wind suddenly ceases, for a few minutes it is perfectly calm, then comes the northwestern with tremendous force. One reason for such large hail stones, is the immense height from which they fall. And the lightning too is immense. A bolt seems sometimes to be half a minute in falling, and sparks seem to fly off from it like sparks from a rocket. One afternoon in August, a terrific storm was passing over. I stood in my door, watching for any whirling signs when a ball dropped a mile to the south, into some wheat stacks and instantly the flames burst forth, and in less than one minute the whole surface of these stacks was ablaze. They burned a day and a night, a splendid bonfire to everyone but to the owner of them. Ten acres of wheat gone in a day. Lightning does not alarm me; I am quite philosophic about it. If it hits me, I wont know what hurt me, and there are a great many places for it to strike and my chance is as good as any, of escape. I presume the coming winter will try our patience pretty well for we shall not have the novelty of wintering in a new country to divert us, and the time will probably seem to pass slower. Also we have become better acquainted with the people here, and that novelty will be gone in a measure.

A GREAT NEWSPAPER.

The Pall Mall Gazette, of London, England, did not overstate the case when it said that The New York Independent is "one of the ablest weeklies in existence." It is as overwhelming as a monthly or quarterly magazine, with all the matter in its many departments. Any monthly might be proud if it could show as distinguished a list of contributors as The Independent. In a single department—its story department—we find, among Englishmen, such contributors as Sir Samuel W. Baker, the celebrated Egyptian explorer; Thomas Hardy, W. E. Norris, James Payn, F. W. Robinson and Henry W. Lucy, the well-known and deservedly popular novelists; while among Americans we notice the names of Edward Everett Hale, Frank R. Stocking, H. H. Boyesen, Sarah O. Jewett, J. S., of Dale, Rebecca Harding Davis and Harriet Prescott Spofford. The Independent printed also, recently, the last story from the pen of the late Ivan Tourgeneff, having secured the only translation from the Russian into English. This department is but a sample of the others. It would seem to us that The Independent offers not only "fifty-two dividends during the year," but, in addition, a stock dividend with each department. We advise our readers to send for a free sample copy.

Modern Science and Skepticism

What has Skepticism done for the world?

Nothing but to suggest doubts. It has even suggested that Rheumatism cannot be cured. Skepticism is as bad as Rheumatism.

What has Science done for the world?

A good many things. For instance, it has shown that Rheumatism can be cured.

It has shown that Neuralgia can be got rid of.

Modern Science has proved that Rheumatism is a blood disease, and has pronounced Athlophoros as the remedy which can completely cure it.

It has proved that although the old doctors failed to overcome Neuralgia, Athlophoros can reach it, and eradicate it from the system.

It has proved that though these tormenting diseases were so slow and obstinate, they can be overcome in a little while by means of Athlophoros!

Don't be skeptical. If you have any doubts as to what Athlophoros can do, write to some of those whom it has cured. For instance, Rev. S. R. Dennis, D.D., Pastor Third Congregational Church, of New Haven, Conn., the Rev. W. P. Corbit, pastor George St. M. E. Church, of New Haven, the Rev. J. E. Searles, pastor Willett St. M. E. Church, New York city, Mr. Brummell, the well known candy manufacturer, of New York, Ex-Gov. Bigelow, of Connecticut, and many others, equally well known.

If you cannot get ATHLOPHOROS of your druggist, we will send it express paid, on receipt of regular price, one dollar per bottle. We prefer that you buy it of your druggist, but if he doesn't it, do not be persuaded to try something else, but order at once from us as directed.

AYER'S Hair Vigor

restores, with the gloss and freshness of youth, faded or gray hair to a natural, rich brown color, or deep black, as may be desired. By its use light or red hair may be darkened, thin hair thickened, and baldness often, though not always, cured.

It checks falling of the hair, and stimulates a weak and sickly growth to vigor. It prevents and cures scurf and dandruff, and heals nearly every disease peculiar to the scalp. As a Ladies' Hair Dressing, the VIGOR is unequalled; it contains neither oil nor dye, renders the hair soft, glossy, and silken in appearance, and imparts a delicate, agreeable, and lasting perfume.

MR. C. P. BRICHER writes from Kirby, O., July 3, 1882: "Last fall my hair commenced falling out, and in a short time I became nearly bald. I used part of a bottle of AYER'S HAIR VIGOR, which stopped the falling of the hair, and started a new growth. I have now a full head of hair growing vigorously, and am convinced that but for the use of your preparation I should have been entirely bald."

J. W. BOWEN, proprietor of the Mc Arthur (Ohio) Enquirer, says: "AYER'S HAIR VIGOR is a most excellent preparation for the hair. I speak of it from my own experience. Its use promotes the growth of new hair, and makes it glossy and soft. The VIGOR is also a sure cure for dandruff. Not within my knowledge has the preparation ever failed to give entire satisfaction."

MR. ANGUS FAIRBAIRN, leader of the celebrated "Fairbairn Family" of Scottish Vocalists, writes from Boston, Mass., Feb. 8, 1880: "Ever since my hair began to give signs of the change which fleeting time produces, I have used AYER'S HAIR VIGOR, and so have been able to maintain an appearance of youthfulness—a matter of considerable consequence to ministers, orators, actors, and in fact every one who lives in the eyes of the public."

MRS. O. A. PARCOTT, writing from 18 Elm St., Charlestown, Mass., April 11, 1881, says: "Two years ago I had a terrible attack of my hair came in. It was dried up, dry, and was fast growing bald. One bottle of AYER'S HAIR VIGOR stopped the falling, and a new growth came on. My hair had not grown at all for years, and was completely covered with short hair. It has now reached my waist, and is now as good as it ever did. I regret that I used but one bottle of the VIGOR, but now use it occasionally as a dressing."

We have hundreds of similar testimonials to the efficacy of AYER'S HAIR VIGOR. It needs but a trial to convince the most skeptical of its value.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

—Any falling off in the condition of farm stock should be strictly guarded against as cold weather approaches.

Pastures beyond their prime need to be reinforced by roots, fodder-corn, or other food. All animals profit much from any extra feed at this season of the year.—Albany Journal.

Buckwheat should be harvested before frost can injure it. Cut it in the morning when the dew is on, to prevent shelling. Thresh as soon as the straw is sufficiently dry, and spread the grain thinly upon the floor, as it may heat in large heaps.—Cleveland Leader.

—Potatoes should be dug nearly as soon as the tops have dried down, no matter whether they are intended for marketing at once or to be put in the cellar. If the cellar is cool, dry and dark they will keep better than in the ground, and will not be liable to be spoiled by too much wet weather, as they would be in the field.—Prairie Farmer.

—At this season the troughs where stock are watered should be well cleaned, at least once a week. Leaves and sediment rapidly decay in warm weather, and there will be subsequent damage to the health of stock and the purity of milk given by cows. So large a portion of pure milk is water that the quality of water which cows have to drink becomes very important.—Rural New Yorker.

—There are various preparations for whitening the hands which can be used without harm. Glycerine, vaseline, cold cream or mutton tallow rubbed in will do much to soften them. Oat meal and corn-meal, both dry and moist, may be used with good effect. The roughest and ugliest pair of hands may be made smooth and soft, if not white, in one month if the owner will but wash them well in warm water every night and rub them well with whichever of these simple preparations suits her best, and then incase them in a pair of loose gloves from which the finger-tips have been cut.—Chicago Journal.

Fitting Stock for Winter.

When stock has been fitted for roughing it, which, of course, means feeding up to meet cold weather, the owner is in a position to choose between carrying over to spring or longer, or sending forward to market at any time, that is, if he has fed up to such a state of fatness as will, more surely than any other, enable the animal to resist a low degree of temperature without discomfort. If a thick wall of sawdust around a body of ice preserves it from melting in hot weather longer than a thin wall, then, on the same principle, a thick wall of adipose under the hide of a farm beast protects the animal from readily suffering by exposure to cold. The sawdust in the one case is the non-conductor which prevents an interchange of temperature between the ice within the wall and the hot air without, while, reversing the order, the layer of fat under the hide of the animal prevents the transfer of cold to the inner tissues, being a non-conductor equally efficient with the wall of saw dust in the other case. The wall of fat once placed beneath the hide is, if fair protection be given, somewhat easily held there; while it is hardly possible to put on this layer during winter's cold without extra protection from the low temperature.

Hence the wisdom of seeing to it early in the season, while flesh is easily acquired, that the gain is put on which is sure to be required when the mercury falls low down in the tube. Roughing it is nothing else than instituting a warfare between the tissues of which the animal is made up and the elements without. A moment's reflection will convince any one of the utter wastefulness of dealing out food three times a day in such free quantities as are required if feed is depended on to keep up the animal warmth, reasonably comfortable shelter being denied when the weather is decidedly cold. Dr. Playfair likened the body of a beast to a furnace in which fuel is consumed to produce heat, as the principle is quite like the feeding of farm animals, in so far as the food is given to maintain the animal heat. The continued tendency towards equalization in temperature of bodies and substances in contact, acts upon live animals exposed to contact with the outer air, and hence, when the temperature goes down there is a struggle within the body in its effort to preserve its normal temperature. This effort may be aptly likened to that made to warm a room with a heater, but little fuel being required when the outside temperature is well up for the normal temperature or the animal body is easily maintained under like circumstances without a special provision of food for this purpose.

Fitting stock for roughing it is very unprofitable as a preliminary process, because the term implies exercise. Without the out-door exercise in inclement as well as in all other kinds of weather, the term roughing it would hardly apply. Exercise, in proportion to its extent, calls for increased action of the lungs and heart, and this lung action wastes the living tissues rapidly. It follows that quietness and seclusion are the means to be used for saving the tissues. Therefore to feed up for exposure during winter involves a great waste during the preliminary as it does during the final experiences. But in this day we hope no one will persist in the heterodox notion that it is, in any sense, wise to build up during summer valuable material that is to be ruthlessly squandered during the cold months. With fresh producers, the making of edible flesh is a slow and expensive process, and flesh once put on should in no case be parted with. If domestic animals could be fattened as rapidly as the carnivora are when they are full fed then the task would indeed be easy. But the carnivora eat flesh and tissue having the constituents of their own bodies ready prepared, while domestic animals are built up by a slow process from materials which, while made up of constituents measurably like the body, are still, in the main, quite unlike it. But it is doubtless a wise provision that the flesh counted good for use as human food is put on by a slow process, otherwise it would be flabby and oily; would shrink in the pot and vanish before a cold blast.—National Live Stock Journal.

The Indians, knowing the value of Wild Cherry bark as a cure for coughs and colds, used to prepare it in their rude way, and in winter kept it constantly on hand. The careful and secret method of preparing Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry makes it superior to all other preparations. It is very pleasant to take.

Hood's Sarsaparilla, acting through the blood, reaches every part of the system, and in this way positively cures catarrh.

FOUR POINTS

Prepared by an entirely NEW METHOD.
Composed of the PUREST MATERIALS.
WILL NOT INJURE THE FABRIC.
WILL CLEANSE WITHOUT RUBBING.

You can do a large washing without any rubbing; use the boiling process instead. You can save Time, Labor, Fuel, Soap and Clothing.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.

Cut up fine and dissolve one half bar in half gallon of hot water. Pour half this dissolved soap out in a tub with just sufficient hot water to cover a boiler full of clothes. Then put the clothes in to soak, rubbing plenty of soap in the most soiled parts. Be sure that the soaking water is hot; soak the clothes half an hour; stir them occasionally so that they may get the full benefit of the hot suds; pour the remainder of the dissolved soap into the boiler, adding sufficient water to cover the clothes; wring them lightly out of the suds. Soap the stained spots and place loosely in the boiler; boil 15 to 20 minutes, rinse well, blue and hang to dry. Do not crowd the boiler too full. The same boiling water may be used for further boilings by adding a little soap to each boiler-full of clothes. Flannels and prints should not be boiled, only a little rubbing required after soaking. This soap will cleanse clothing as thoroughly as any other, without the use of the boiler. We prefer and recommend the boiling process as in itself a cleansing process, saving labor, the wear of the wash-board, and being the best disinfectant known, it is easier to boil the dirt out than to rub it out. You can cleanse perfectly the finest fabric without injury; the finest point lace and lace curtains. Soak point lace in hot suds made with this soap, press water out with the hand; boil 5 to 5 minutes in clean suds made with this soap, rinse thoroughly, press carefully between the folds of a towel, roll in a dry towel, and iron between pieces of old flannel. Soak curtains 10 to 20 minutes and boil 5 to 20 minutes, rinse, stretch on frame, or pin every scallop to carpet over a sheet to dry; no ironing required!

Be sure and ask for ELECTRIC-LIGHT SOAP, and take no other.

A STANDARD MEASURE.

Need of a National Legal Standard of Measure for Farm and Garden Products.

It is to be regretted that we have no National legal standard measure for the various farm and garden products. For a few articles, like wheat, flour and bran, the weight per barrel and bushel is the same in all parts of the country, but for all other articles there is no uniform standard, and a man who orders a barrel, bushel, basket, or box of vegetables, fruit, or seed, runs a risk in regard to the quantity he will receive for his money. We have no standard apple barrel, and we believe there are but two States in which a man can demand any fixed weight for a bushel. The result is that a barrel or bushel of apples is an indefinite quantity. In grain it is almost as bad as with apples, for while the California bushel of barley must weigh fifty pounds, and in New York forty-eight, in Louisiana it is only thirty-two pounds. The legal bushel of buckwheat in the different States and Territories varies from forty pounds in Nevada and California to fifty-two in Illinois, Missouri, Nebraska and Kentucky. In New York State forty-eight pounds is a bushel. In Canada fifty pounds of flax-seed is a legal bushel, but in New York and New Jersey it is fifty-five pounds, while in some other States it is fifty-six pounds. With the various kinds of grass seed there is no uniform standard of weight per bushel, for in Washington Territory a legal bushel of timothy seed must weigh fifty pounds, in Vermont forty-two, in New York forty-four, while in Illinois and several other Western States, it is forty-five pounds. The legal bushel of castor oil beans varies from forty to forty-six pounds to the bushel. Shelled corn is almost uniform, although there are two pounds difference between New York and New Jersey. In the former it is fifty-eight pounds to the bushel, and in the latter it is fifty-six; at least these were the legal weights a short time since. In California the legal bushel must weigh fifty-two pounds, but in a large majority of the States fifty-six pounds is the weight. In corn on the ear the weight of a bushel varies from sixty-eight to seventy-two pounds.

In vegetables and roots there is as wide a range of weights per bushel as in grain and seeds. Connecticut, which has long been noted for its onion crop, fixes the weight per bushel of this fragrant bulb at fifty pounds; but Indiana places it at forty-nine, while Illinois, Iowa and some adjoining States call for fifty-seven pounds. Maine and Massachusetts are satisfied with fifty-two pounds, while the Canadians demand sixty pounds for a bushel. In a majori- of the States sixty pounds is a legal bushel of Irish potatoes, but in Maryland, Kentucky and Pennsylvania, it is only fifty-six pounds. Sweet potatoes have no fixed standard, except in about a half dozen States, but the weight varies from forty-six to fifty-five pounds per bushel. Parsnips are supposed to weigh forty-five pounds a bushel in Connecticut, but in the adjoining State of Rhode Island fifty pounds, and in New Hampshire sixty pounds is the legal bushel.

A similar variation in weights and measures is to be found in almost every article produced on the farm, and the only wonder is that our people have so long submitted to such a condition of things, for it must be apparent to every one that a uniform standard of weights and measures would be a benefit to both the producer and consumer. A farmer cannot obtain much information from our market reports so long as a basket of peaches may mean a peck and a half or three pecks, for we find this difference in the size, and yet all go under the general head of baskets. A crate of vegetables may mean a half bushel or more, and even, as we have shown, a legal bushel in one State may be one-fourth less than in another, even in the longest settled parts of the country. Cabbage are usually quoted at so much per head or dozen, but whether they weigh two pounds or ten pounds each is only to be ascertained by a personal examination. All such vegetables should be sold by the pound; then the producer as well as consumer would know upon what kind of a basis the was doing business. As our markets are now conducted, there are not only opportunities, but great inducements for cheating on both sides. That there have been some improvements of late years in regard to size of baskets, crates and barrels we admit, but the really honest dealers can never get possession of our markets until we have a uniform standard of weights and measures.

A few years ago the berries were sent to the market in baskets holding from one-fourth to one-sixth of a quart. These, in a grand measure, have gone out of use, and the pint and quart baskets have taken their place; but with larger baskets for peaches, plums and other fruits, the indefinite and very uncertain sizes still hold their own, much to the disadvantage of the honest producer and unfortunate consumer.

Massachusetts has recently passed a law fixing a standard for measuring cranberries, and it prescribes that the barrel shall hold one hundred quarts and the crate thirty-two quarts, level measure. The barrel corresponds very closely to the New Jersey standard, but the crate is somewhat smaller. Now the cranberries from Massachusetts and those from New Jersey are to be found side by side in our markets, but the ordinary purchaser of this fruit will scarcely be able to distinguish the difference between a thirty-two and twenty-eight quart crate without making a careful measurement, which will seldom be thought of when making purchases of this kind; in fact, our people have become so accustomed to the variation in the sizes of crates, barrels and baskets, that they have no definite idea of how many quarts, pounds or bushels they should hold, even where there is some pretension of following a legal standard.

There certainly can be no reasonable excuse for continuing these multiform weights and measures, for they beget jealousy and dishonesty in the dealer, and in the end are an injury to legitimate trade. The General Government should take up this matter and appoint an able committee to consult with the authorities of the different States and Territories, and endeavor to fix upon some standard for the whole country, and thereby do away with the present confusion, which is likely to exist until we have a general law regulating this matter of weights and measures.—N. Y. Sun.

THE MODEL WIFE.

The Woman Whom Husbands Love More Than Their Cigars and Horses.

Scripture, and history, and poetry vie with one another in sounding the praises of the model wife. The man who is blessed with a companion worthy the name of a model wife can snap his fingers in the faces of all the old bachelors that ever breathed and give them points each day in every exalted pleasure that makes life worth living. There is no danger of his applying for a divorce.

Unfortunately for the married men of this generation, the model wives are most all dead. The struggle for existence was too much for them. The ceaseless, silent self-sacrifice needed to build up a model domestic character could only be met and borne as long as there was a living appreciation of the personal laws of duty that underlie all sorts of ideal existence. The men who appreciated model wives, and were in return willing to be model husbands, were so few that the good wives—that is, the model wives—grew discouraged and took to their graves or some more congenial occupation.

The few model wives that are left are cherished by their husbands beyond even their cigars or their horses. The model wife of the workingman, clerk or business man has some appreciation of the ten thousand little labors, petty cares and annoyances that her husband has to go through each day in his workshop or office. She considers that such worrying cares are a part of the duties by which her husband makes a living for himself, for her and for the children, if there are any. And when the husband comes home from his work, tired, perhaps cross, and hungry and out of sorts, she is always ready to meet him with some quiet and gentle good cheer. Her own person is attractive and restful to him. She always has some pleasant scheme in mind to make his home hours delightful to him and so make herself indispensat and a constant joy.

The model wife does not see how many poor and silly or exciting things she can say to her tired husband. If she has anything to ask she waits until he is rested and fed. She invites pleasant people to her home, not to show how many rich things she has, but to make her husband's home hours pass cheerfully. She knows that if she is half a woman no other can displace her in her husband's affections. She is always more attractive in her manners to her husband than to other men. She is the genius of the household. But, unfortunately, most of them are dead.—Philadelphia Times.

SOMETHING ABOUT SMILES.

An Earnest Plea for the Use of Anæsthetics in the Photographist's Studio.

There are many vanities of the genus smiles. There's the smile that is child-like and bland, the cultivated smile, and the plebian smile that ripples forth like the first joyous laugh of the boiler-factory, and that spreads out with the gurgle that closes the eyes, trots out the wisdom-teeth, and then shows a roguish dimple in the tonsils.

There might be enumerated also the classical smile, the subdued smile, the parlor smile, the sacred smile, the before-election smile, the after-election smile and the smile that you get two for a quarter, called the twofor smile.

Then we have the stage smile and the portrait smile. Do you call to mind the general smirk which is, in fact, the thin silk overskirt of joy covering the silicia sham of a nameless woe? Do you happen to have about your house the photograph of a friend whose petrified gayety fills your eyes with briny weep?

Joy is something that we can not seize ruthlessly and lead it into the photographer's laboratory by the ear. I've tried that. I always leave my umbrella and my hope behind when I go into the photographer's gilded hall. I can laugh while the dentist pulls out my sound teeth and plugs the poor ones, and I can even be gay while nature and the cucumber of commerce are engaged in mortal combat, but I can not affect a joy that I do not feel why the cast-iron hat-rack of the artist leans against my love of home, and the artist bids me look at a place on the wall that is freckled with lodine.

I am positive that the art of photography is upon the eve of a grand stride toward perfection. Those who have never seen anything on the eve of a grand stride will find little of interest in what I am about to say; but the day is not far distant when no sane man will have his photograph pulled without the administration of an anæsthetic. Cut this out and see if I am not right.—Bill Nye, in Denver Opinion.

A Good Hint to Workmen.

The old saying that "a man is taken by the coat that he wears," applies to journeymen plumbers. Show us a man that loses his self-pride as to his appearance, as a general rule he also becomes careless in the work he performs. On the other hand, a man that has a good appearing tool-bag, containing tools requisite and necessary to perform a good job of plumbing, also keeps himself clean and tidy, it is a sure indication that he can perform a good job of work. How often do we have the question put to us by our customers when ordering work done: "Will you send me that last man that done our work?" Why? "O, because he attends to his business; don't fool with the girls; goes about his work in a workmanlike manner, and don't mess and dirty the entire house up, and tear the wood-work of the whole house apart. If you can't send him I would prefer waiting a day or two until you can." Ain't this satisfactory proof to a boss? Yes; and these are the men that study their own interests as well as the bosses', and an ornament to any trade or profession.—Plumber's Trade Journal.

A Great Discovery.

Our blessings are not appreciated until we are deprived of them. Most notable among them is health, the lack of which magnifies our other burdens. A hacking cough, a severe cold, or any throat or lung disease is very troublesome; but all these may be quickly and permanently removed by Dr. Bigelow's Positive Cure. Price 50 cents; trial bottle free.

If people troubled with colds would take Ayer's Cherry Pectoral before going to church or places of entertainment, they would avoid coughing, greatly to the comfort of both speakers and hearers. Public speakers and singers find that the Pectoral wonderfully increases the power and flexibility of the voice.

Witnesses At Hand.

Mr. Alexander Pelcher, 218 Market St., New Haven, Conn., proposes to remove all doubt about the virtue of ATHLOPHOROS in his case, by producing witnesses when required. He writes: "Was stricken with Inflammatory Rheumatism. My daughter mentioned the new remedy called Athlophoros. Immediately sent for some. After taking two doses the pain left me. I slept well, and arose the next morning free from the terrible disease. The one bottle cured me. If any one doubts this I will prove it by several witnesses."

Catarrh.

Is a very prevalent and exceedingly disagreeable disease, liable if neglected, to develop into serious consumption. Being a constitutional disease, it requires a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, acting through the blood, reaches every part of the system, effecting a radical and permanent cure of catarrh in even its most severe forms. Defective Vision.

An article in the London Times by Dr. Brundenell Carter on the influence of civilization upon the eyesight discusses the causes of defective vision among the adults and children of the present day. Dr Carter says that few things are more remarkable than the imperfection of common knowledge about all matters which relate to the use and functions of the eye. One consequence of want of knowledge about vision is that the evolution of the eye has been left to be the sport of accident. In running, in jumping, in rowing, in every game which requires skill, strength and endurance, the young urban Englishman excels; but his sight has been suffered to decline in acuteness by sheer neglect; and the conditions of his life have also produced two kinds of deformity of the eyeball—the short-sighted eye and the flat or hypermetropic eye, each of which constitutes a serious deterioration in the organs of the visual sense. Having explained the nature and causes of hypermetropia, myopia and astigmatism, Dr. Carter mentioned that Dr. Cohn, of Breslau, in the years 1864 and 1865 examined the eyes 10,060 scholars and found 1,630 of them with eyes of defective shape. Of these 1,072 were myopic, 139 were flat-eyed, 23 were the subjects of astigmatism, and 396 were suffering from the results of previous disease. Dr. Cohn further found the faulty shape of the eyeballs, especially in the direction of myopia, increased steadily, both in numerical prevalence and in degree, as school life was prolonged: being least frequent and least pronounced in the elementary schools, more frequent and pronounced in the intermediate, most frequent and most pronounced in the finishing schools. His researches have since been repeated and extended by many other observers, and his results have been fully confirmed in other parts of Germany, in Russia, and in America while the American observations have shown not only that flat eyes have a tendency, from the strain thrown upon them by their defect, to pass into the opposite condition of short sight, but also that this change occurs with the greatest certainity with under ed or unhealthy children, and in schools where sanitary conditions are neglecfed. Dr. Carter concludes by asking whether there is any reason why perfection of sight should not be made a point of physical excellence in all athletic conjests. If such a change were introduced a first effect would be to make people understand what they ought to be able to see. Important good results would not be immediate, nor could they be fully attained except in more than one generation; but it can not be doubted that they would ultimately follow.—St. James' Gazette.

Newspapers Afloat.

On board the Hecla, one of the ships belonging to Captain Edward Parry's expedition in search of the northwest passage, a paper was printed called the North Georgia Gazette and Winter Chronicle. The first number was dated the 1st November, 1819, and its twenty-first and last the 20th March, 1820. The Great Britain steamer, which started for Australia on the 21st of August, 1852, may claim to have inaugurated the practice of publishing a newspaper on board ship, as a paper entitled the Great Britain Times was published every week during the voyage and distributed among the passengers. At the present time these seaborn broadsheets are a scource of considerable amusement and go a long way to relieve the monotony of the passage, as the passengers not only read but supply the articles. Burlesque telegrams, jokes made by the passengers, and all the news, whether social, nautical, or personal, of the voyage, are published in their columns.—Chambers' Journal.

MABLEY'S

GLORIOUS SUCCESS.

The unparalleled run on Mabley's Bankrupt Bargains the past week has set the town a talking; certain merchants are green with envy at our bustling, rushing business and wonder why they can't get a share of it. They say it is a shame that we should cut down prices so low that they cannot make a living. We are only exercising a privilege this glorious Republic extends to all—that is, conducting our own business after our own methods.

OUR BANKRUPT BARGAINS

Were purchased from large wholesale firms in the east, who recently failed. Mr. Mabley bought them from 40 to 60 Cents on the Dollar—that is on the original cost of manufacture, so you can see we can sell them lower than other houses own their goods for and yet make a satisfactory profit. Instead of merchants complaining about us they should thank us, for we bring trade here from every county in the district, from all over the state, and as we cannot possibly wait upon them all we afford grumbling merchants a chance of catching those we hav'nt time to wait upon. If they would mark their goods at a fair margin and work of sell more of them they might in time gain some recognition from the people.

We Work for all we Get,

And give the people full value for their money.

We received 25 more large cases of those Bankrupt Goods last week, and this week we intend to offer greater "Drives" than ever. Last week we had a tremendous rush, the goods seemed to "walk away." Our sales were far ahead of the corresponding week of last year. We sold last week $5.400, $5.400.

This is more than twice as much as any other clothing house in the city received.

We are well prepared for a similar rush this week. Below are a few specimen prices which we will guarantee full 20 per cent. below other dealers' cost prices. Remember these are

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

The social of St. John's (Episcopal) church at S. Browns on Thursday evening last was well attended (there being about one hundred persons in attendance) and all seemed to be well pleased with their evening's entertainment. Receipts $9.

We noticed the Misses Liddle in town the latter part of last week they were visiting at their aunt's Mrs S. Brown. They report lively times at Macon corners with their skating rink and elephant.

Truman Jacobs, an old resident of Bridgewater, but now of the northern part of this state is visiting at his brother-in-laws Emanuel Glimpses in Bridgewater.

Chas. Stoner has recently again become a citizen of Bridgewater having moved his family from Livingston co. into the house vacated a short time ago by H. M. Lazell who has gone to Tuscola county.

There was no preaching in the Congregational church on Sunday last. We understand that arrangements are being made to employ Rev. Mr. Baines who preached for the church a week ago last Sunday as pastor. So may it be.

The skating rink business seems to be improving. We notice some very fine skating, with only occasionally a fall by the inexperienced.

New Drug store. Chas. C. Burroughs has recently purchased the drug store of Dr. Burchard and has commenced business at the old stand of J. W. Burchard. We predict for Charley a very liberal patronage as he is well known in Clinton and he being well raised in the drug business and he has also a thorough training as prescription clerk. People can go to the new drug store, and have their medicine scientifically put up. Charley also keeps a nice stock of all the leading brands of cigars. Go in and smoke.

John Hause and wife are visiting Battle Creek, the former home of Mrs. Hause. They will probably eat Thanksgiving Turkey with their Battle Creek friends.

We learned with surprise of the sudden death (early Monday morning of paralysis) of Mrs. J. R. Severance. It is now only about eleven months since the death of her husband. They lived in Franklin township. Three daughters one married and two unmarried survive their parents, who deeply feel their loss. The funeral of the deceased was at the house and was largely attended by friends and neighbors. Peace to her ashes.

We understand that the VanDemarks have quite a stock of undertaking goods on hand which they are anxious to dispose of.

Thanksgiving Turkeys are making their appearance without a gobble, but they are too high for our reach. Who will invite us to eat Turkey on Thanksgiving day? Don't all speak at once, you might confuse us.

According to the usual custom of our church people here, thanksgiving services will be held at the Methodist church. The Baptist minister, Rev. Ogden, will preach the sermon.

The friends of Mr. Kerridge, the pastor of the Methodist church, will, if all is well, give him a donation in the basement of the M. E. church on Wednesday evening, Dec. 3. This is not to be a part of the salary paid him, which is $500, but a gift from the people. Every one is invited, and the ladies and gentlemen of the church will do all in their power to make it a good social time.

Next Sabbath evening, Nov. 30, the W. F. M. S. Auxiliary will hold its quarterly missionary concert in the M. E. church. Exercises will commence at the usual hour. Mrs. J. L. Tuttle and Mrs. D. E. Palmer are expected to sing solos. Miss Addie Ellis, Miss Mina Muir, Miss Hattie Platt and others, will either read or recite missionary literature. The pastor will read "Mrs. Pickett's mite box." Mr. Geo. Goodrich will have charge of the music. Every one that takes any interest in missionary work are very cordially invited.

MACON MUSIC.

This week is a gentle reminder of winter with all its characteristics.

Spencer Morgan, who has spent several months in the west, is shaking hands with Macon friends. All glad to see Spence again.

Our Ridgeway correspondent's mind must be somewhat unbalanced. Even if we needed relief we have too much respect "to kick our dad" to obtain it. He is a pretty lively "dad" yet, and would resent any such treatment. The Ridgeway correspondent is a good example of a monomaniac. To use a milder term, we should say that he is possessed of but one idea, because he has room for no more. We do not expect to excite sympathy from him, for his sensibilities are so dead that they have lost all power of excitability.

In replying to "Looker On," we desire to say that we based every assertion we made upon the words of the political prohibitionist himself. The prohibitionists pretend to be honest; therefore we must accept all their sayings as correctly expressing their views and wishes. Now nearly every political prohibitionist with whom we had any conversation, said that it was not expected that the Union party could elect any officers this fall, that the principal object the party wished to accomplish now was to defeat the republican party, and thereby to put the democracy into power. They gave as their reasons that the defeat of the republican party would be its annihilation as a party; that, in four years, the people would be so disgusted with democratic rule that the old republicans would then ally themselves with the Union party, and the result of this mixture would be the grand moral party, that would sweep the land with victory. So we say that no one has reason to be more exultant over the election than the political prohibitionist. He wanted to defeat the republican party, and he did it, therefore he should rejoice. If he didn't desire to defeat the republicans and to put the democracy into power, then his words belied his tongue. Having accomplished his object, he should, if consistent stand by the result and endeavor to perpetuate it.

"Looker On" wishes us to name one prohibitionist who is jubilant over the result of the election. If we are not mistaken in the personage of "Looker On," that name should head the list. We have heard many of the "moral party" express joy over the result—some living in Macon, some living elsewhere. In one instance an ardent political prohibitionist, to our knowledge, called in the boys and had a grand "blow out" on a small scale, over the result. And yet he was not jubilant: Strange coincidence! We will admit, however, that there are a few exceptions. Occasionally a man who voted with the Unionists out of curiosity is to be found. He had his curiosity satisfied, and now he feels "blue" over the result. But such characters are few.

In conclusion we repeat that the political prohibitionist has reason to be jubilant, is jubilant, judging from his own words, and ought to stand by the democracy, his faithful ally: and when his political race is run he may have the mantle of democracy as a winding sheet, and lie down to sweet dreams of what might have been.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

Mercury got there Monday and registered 10° above zero.

Quite wintry for the past few days.

Mr. John VanVleet moved into his new house Saturday. Mr. VanVleet has one of the finest farm residence in Southern Michigan.

The Christian church at Britton will hold their annual donation at the church Wednesday Dec. 3d, and extend a cordial invitation to all their friends.

Mrs. M. A. Barret had some corn and chickens stole Saturday night from her barn. There are several reports of loosing fowls the past few days.

Mrs. David McNair and C. A. Sharp spent the sabbath with their mother who has been quite sick for a few days but is better now. Carlisle remained until Monday and shook the hands of friends and had a pleasant chat.

Rev. W. J. Clark went to Detroit to hear Mr. Moody the great evangelist on Saturday.

G. P. Waring is making some improvements in his hall and repairing it, and will have it ready for public use in a few days. He will seat it with chairs and build a fine stage. It will accommodate about 300. It is something that has long been needed here.

Mr. Geo. Boss, who has been sick for some time is out on the street again.

Morley & Co. shipped two car loads of hogs to Buffalo from here Saturday.

The poles to the telegraph line from the village to Mr. Cadmus were set Saturday. They talk of running the line to Easlick's tile yard.

That load of colored people that passed through here last week must have been from Georgia or some other southern state, and were fleeing from the bondage the Republicans say will overtake them as soon as Cleveland takes his seat. They might have been representatives for Blaine from N. Y., who knows?

Amusements for the long evenings the coming winter: At Ridgeway, church socials and literaries; at Britton, roller rink and dancing; at Holloway, one man to run away with an other man's wife.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. H. Arner invited their relatives to the village to spend the evening on Saturday, in honor of their 24th marriage anniversary. After an hour of social converse, supper was announced consisting of oysters, etc., after which the friends presented them with a very fine cloth-basket, which was a surprise to them. After a few congratulations, they departed for their several homes well pleased with the evening visit.

FARMERS CLUB.

Friday evening Nov. 14, the farmer's social club met at the residence of Mr. F. C. Rector. There was a fair attendance. The program was good and was well carried out. Select reading by Mrs. R. B. Gillespie was a comic selection and was well read. Essay by Emma Schreder was exceptionally good. The music was good and well rendered.

The question, "Does it pay to raise poultry for profit," was opened by Mr. Horton, who said it was the aim of every farmer to grow those products that would produce the most profit from the least outlay. The speaker did not believe that there was one farmer in fifty that could tell what his hogs or cattle, or even any other product of the farm cost him, or even had any definite idea what his profits were upon the same. The speaker said that they had kept a strict account with their chickens for four years, but could not find the account of only one year, that of 1871. In this account the chickens had been charged with every pound of grain or meal they had been fed, at the regular price of the same in the Tecumseh market, and had been credited with all the eggs laid and the chickens produced at the prices brought at the time they were sold. What damage the chickens might have done was offset with the benefit they had done us in the destruction of insects, worms and refuse about the farm.

The account for that year stands thus:

Chickens Dr. To.
First acc't. 56 fowls at 50c.	$28.00
Grain, meal and other food	48.73
Total Dr.	$76.73
Chickens Cr. by.
426 doz. eggs sold, 48 doz. set	$63.33
Chickens sold, 1,111 lbs. at 9c.	100.00
Total Cr.	$163.38
	76.73
Net profit for the year	$86.60

or $1.54 on each chicken kept over.

The above showing was with common fowls and half blood Brahmas. Mr. Horton was confident that nearly every other year when the account was kept that the showing had been better than this particular year.

Mr. F. C. Rector believed that chickens were a nuisance. Said they were all the time underfoot and where they ought not to be and if it were not necessary to have some for eggs and occasionally a chicken to eat he would not have them around.

Mr. R. B. Gillespie thought that any farmer could make about fifty fowls or such a matter, quite profitable. Had not kept any acct. to see what the profit would be.

Mr. A. G. Hall was quite sure that there was more real profit in poultry than in hogs or other stock. His fowls did not do him any damage that he knew of. Thought that no one's garden need be troubled if they would keep a good picket fence around it, a thing that ought to be around every garden.

Mr. Benedict thought that fowls if they were well kept, and cared for, were more profitable than almost any thing else, that is a certain amount. Thought you could over stock with them, as well as any thing else. Thought that one reason why a great many did not make them pay was that they paid no attention to them and let them find their own food and shelter.

Mr. Kehoe would agree with Mr. Rector. Did not believe there was any profit in raising fowls as a money product. Considered them a nuisance if more was kept than for one's own use.

Club adjourned to meet at the residence of Mr. R. B. Gillespie in two weeks Friday evening Nov. 28th. This being our regular meeting for the election of officers there will be only a short program and no subject for discussion.

HOW IT HAPPENED.

DOLLY'S STORY.

Yes, it happened all froo me!
This is how it come about:
Paul was going off to sea,
'Cause our Kate and him fell out.
Kate was in the souf quadrangle,
Looking for her silver bangle;
Nip and I were running by,
And we heard her cry and cry.

There were vines, and rows, too,
All about the old stone gate,
And we hided, and peeked froo,
And we saw my sister Kate
Take her pretty diamond locket—
Cousin Paul's gift—out of her pocket,
And she kissed the picture in it
'Bout a hundred times a minute!

We were sorry as could be!
And we tried to skurry past—
(Nip's my furly dog, you see),
But a rose briar held me fast;
Then I saw my cousin Paul
Peeking over the rosery wall,
And he looked so white and grim
I was 'most afraid of him!

So we cuddled down, as close
As two mouses, in the dark!
And I pinched poor Nippy's nose
So he couldn't growl or bark.
While we watched 'em, cousin Paul
Leaning on the rosery wall,
And Kate, solemn as could be,
Letting on she didn't see!

He was staring dow at her,
But she woul-in't l ok or speak;
So I gave the vines a whirr,
And began to laugh and shriek—
While we scampered off and hid—
"Katy did! Katy did!
Katy kissed the pretty locket
She's got hided in her pocket!"

By and by we heard 'em talk,
Cousin Paul and sister Kate,
Coming down the Laurel walk,
Froo the old quadrangle gate;
They were stepping long as s-l-o-w—
And his arm was round her, so—
And I heard him ask her—well,
Guess I promised not to tell!

A THANKSGIVING LESSON.

How the Family Plate Was Lost, and How Restored.

The town of Locustville is situated on a majestic river, and sufficiently near the city of New York to be deemed suburban. Why Locustville? a Betsy Trotwood might have inquired, as these trees are not numerous in the vicinity. Possibly the memory of the delicate foliage and sweet blossoms lingers in a locality once described by a French translator of Fenimore Cooper, with the aid of his dictionary, in these words: "The stranger alighted before the door of the mansion, and fastened his horse to a large grasshopper." Suffice it that Locustville is modern, pretty, and picturesquely perched on the river bank, with the railroad track below, while the more prosaic element of butcher, baker and candlestick-maker is grouped about the station. The spot is a true paradise of the man of business, who dreams even at desk and ledger of rural repose.

There are cottages painted white, with green shutters, and usually shaded with weeping-willow trees; and eccentric cottages, slate gray in hue, with facings of black and orange; and English cottages of red brick, the casements boasting diamond panes of glass. Nor are nice shades of distinction wanting in this suburban community. The red-brick cottage, as home of a banker, looks down on the modest white one, abode of a mere clerk, while the slate-gray house soars above both, as nest of an æsthetic poet.

The most remote of these residences is Gothic in structure, and all of Locustville resembles the home of the friendly sparrow in the trees of city squares. There is a freshness, a smiling expansiveness, so to speak, about this domicile which arrests attention. The smoke floats up like a banner from a span-new chimney, a crystal bubble of a conservatory sparkles on the left side, and striped awnings flutter over the windows when the sun is hot. There is an entrance gate capable of admitting a wheeled vehicle, with a tiny sweep of gravel leading up to the front door. Nor are external decorations lacking. A diminutive fountain adorns the grass-plot, while a pagoda-shaped summer-house is built on the river-bank. A tree trunk covered with ivy simulates a ruined column, a net-work of twine stretched across the porch still held some sprays of drooping vines in the wild November weather of which we write, trained by the fostering care of the mistress of the house.

Said Pamela, "Have another buckwheat cake, darling."

"Well, no, love; but these corn muffins are excellent," replied Walter.

Then Pamela buttered delicately one of the praised muffins, and presented it to her lord and master, while he partook of breakfast, with his watch placed on the table beside his plate, and his ear alert for the locomotive whistle at the next station, which should warn him to flee on the path of duty cityward. Walter Timbs was book-keeper in the great dry-goods house of Drugget & Co. He adjusted his habit of life with the same regularity that he balanced his accounts. The menage of the Gothic cottage was young, even as the furniture was new. Walter Pamela had not been married a year.

"No, indeed!" said Pamela, rising from the table: "we are to keep Thanksgiving Day—our first Thanksgiving—at home. I made up my mind to that a month ago, and I told papa as much when he invited us to town." She put on a stylish sea-skin cap and coachman's cape to accompany her husband to the cars. Pamela performed this act of devotion with gayety, for she was still more bride than matron.

Walter smiled, and then looked grave. "I wish you would teach Bridget to keep the front door locked, my love," he admonished. "I invariably find the entrance gate half open, besides. Some day a band of gypsies will come along and steal every tea-spoon. Depend upon it!"

"Perhaps they will carry off the grand piano," suggested Pamela, in sprightly vein, and she tripped down the bank to the station. "If Bridget is careless about leaving doors and gates open, she is a perfect treasure in other respects. Have you forgotten Maggy, who spent her time flirting with neighboring gardeners, to the detriment of your dinner? or Catherine, who got drunk and threatened you with a carving-knife?"

"I have not forgotten all those delusive Swedish and German maidens, claimed by stalwart cousins for Western farms just when they learned to make hot biscuit," rejoined Walter.

"Bridget is as honest as the sun, and so ugly that even Mikey, the grocer's boy, has jilted her for a better-looking girl," added Pamela.

Walter bit his lip. "All that goes for nothing if the front door is not locked," he said. "You should enforce it."

"Nonsense!" laughed Pamela.

Locustville awaited the train at the station, for the railway was the centre of life. Young ladies seated in pony-phaetons bade lovers adieu for the day, mothers imparted anxious advice to sons, while paterfamilias kissed the babies. Even Pamela was not insensible to the exhilaration of being ogled by an entire train of cars as she stood there in her coachman's cape and seal-skin cap. She was a handsome young woman, tall and slight, with fine blue eyes, a creamy skin, and rich black hair brushed high from the nape of a very white neck, and arranged on top of the head in a fashion deemed purely American in Europe.

Away went the train, leaving feminine Locustville to a day of quiet routine. Walter Timbs was perturbed as he took his place in the cars. A cloud had chilled his sunshine. Pamela had made very light of his first attempt at asserting authority. What would come of it? Perhaps his nerves had been tried by a business knot of the previous day at Druggett & Co.'s, impossible to untangle. Possibly that last corn muffin was a tax on digestion calculated to produce gloom of spirit.

"She should not have said 'Nonsense!' when I suggested locking the front door," mused the husband, and immediately took an opposite political view to his companion of the same seat concerning the election of a new Mayor.

Pamela retraced her steps until she regained the Gothic cottage. This day before Thanksgiving was to be long memorable to her, yet it began like all other mornings. She washed the delicate cups and saucers, and put them up in the china closet, after the most approved housewifely fashion. Then she played a Strauss waltz on the grand piano, which nearly filled the tiny drawing-room. Afterward she adjusted curtains, patted cushions, and hovered about the plants of the little conservatory, herself a glowing human blossom, for it was inseparable to her ideas of duty at this date to wear a coquettish cap, decked with scarlet bows, a distracting apron, and red slippers. Valuable rings flashed on her fingers, while a pair of diamond solitaires twinkled in her ears. There were wedding gifts, together with the grand piano and the household furniture. Pamela enjoyed her pretty things, and liked to have them scattered about. She was rehearsing the courses of her Thanksgiving dinner, with the aid of a cook-book, when a shadow darkened the window, and a tramp looked in on her, as a famished dog scents a larder. Dull, sodden, brutal and ferocious, according to the amount of drink accessible, here, he was, a creature preying on the peaceful country until such time as frost and snow should drive him to some city den to plot in darkness, crime and robbery. Pamela shivered, then gave him bread and meat. The tramp received the food with an inarticulate growl, and slouched away again to stretch himself on the ground in the sun at a distance from Locustville, and smoke a pipe. Pamela played another Strauss waltz to efface him. The tramp, swarthy, bearded and unkempt, with heavy jaw and strong white teeth like the fangs of a wild animal, remained stamped on her mind, like a phastasm of the night.

After lunch a bustle of preparation for Thanksgiving pervaded the house. The guest-chamber was re-arranged, and windows opened. At two o'clock Pamela came down-stairs, having unlocked the closet of her own room and taken out a bag. This bag contained the family plate. Soon spoons, forks, knives, pepper-castors and sugar-sifters were spread on the dining-table, together with all those trifles in shining metal given by friends at a wedding.

"There will be work enough to do to-morrow, so these had better be brightened a bit now," thought Mrs. Timbs.

Just then Bridget announced that a steamer was passing on the river, with a band of music and soldiers on board. Steamers gay with flags did not pass Locustville at every hour of the day, so mistress and maid ran to the summer-house to see the excursionists. As they emerged from the back door of the cottage to gain the summer-house on the bank, a man entered the gate stealthily, tried the front door, which was unfastened, and penetrated the house. Oh, rare chance of thieves! Silver was outspread temptingly on the dining-table, and the bag from which it had been taken reposed on a table near at hand. The man glanced around, listened, swept the silver into the bag, and departed as he had come. When mistress and maid returned, the family plate was gone. They gazed at each other in speechless consternation. Was the front door unfastened? Well, yes, an hour earlier Pamela had admitted the Maltese kitten.

Walter Timbs was later than usual in coming home that night. He had paused to smoke a pipe with the poet of the slate-gray cottage, and their talk had turned on a tramp lurking along the hedges with his bundle on a stick. "What will become of us, as a country, if these vagrants are landed on us by Europe, to be supported or live by depredation?" Walter had exclaimed. "Could you not a write a poem—on the subject?"

The poet had removed the amber mouth-piece of his Oriental pipe, and answered, "I might make a tragedy of such a theme."

Then Walter had come home and found the house door so firmly bolted that he had much ado to enter.

"I am glad you remember my injunctions, Pamela," he said, briskly.

Pamela looked at the carpet in pale silence. Bridget peered in the door, disappeared, and a crash of falling crockery signaled her return to the kitchen. Confidences froze on Pamela's lips. Should she tell the truth? Never had such a dinner been served in the Gothic cottage as on that day before Thanksgiving. Mr. Timbs raised the lid of the soup-tureen with the eagerness of a hungry man, dipped the ladle into the milk-thickened oyster stew, and exclaimed, sharply: "Take it away!—this soup is burned."

"I never left it no more nor five minutes," asserted Bridget, and sidled off with the tureen, gazing at her master over her shoulder in such a very strange manner that he might have been warranted in believing sudden madness to to have smitten the household.

Pamela played with her spoon. Alas! it was a plated one for every-day use. The chicken was hopelessly raw, the potatoes were cold, the apple-pie scorched to a cinder, with the addition of a flavor of ashes. Humanity, with an empty stomach, asserted itself in the master of the house as he ate a pickle.

"Really, the prospect for Thanksgiving is a lively one, my dear. I hope the banquet may not prove a Barmecidal feast, after all. I should like a Polynesian pudding I once read about. The bread-fruit, ripe plantain, taro, palm or pandanus nut, are rasped, pounded and baked separately. Then a large tray is filled with cocoanut milk, kept simmering by popping in heated stones, and the other ingredients, fresh from the oven, are added. Think of cocoanut milk for a pudding sauce!"

"Perhaps you had better live in Polynesia," snapped Pamela.

The wretched meal concluded, Walter took refuge in a cigar, while Pamela attacked the grand piano in a storm of discords.

"Spare my nerves," groaned the hungry husband, after a time.

Pamela rose and flounced into the darkness of the little conservatory. Her heart ached, tears were ready to overflow her eyes, and her nerves were strung to a tension of excitement by the disaster of the day; but pride still upheld her. The conservatory was dark and fragrant; the young wife moved about with an assumption of indifference, and sang a little tune. The stand of large plants formed a denser foliage at the end, with a recess behind. As she lifted a spray of flowers to inhale their perfume, Pamela saw a man crouching on his hands and knees in the recess. She recognized the shock head of the tramp. Pamela's heart bounded violently, and stood still; the blood ran cold in her veins. She did not scream or fall. In a lightning flash of swiftest conviction she beheld the tramp, discovered, spring forth to stretch Walter lifeless at her feet, if she ceased to sing. Held by this mortal dread, she continued to hum her song; she even plucked a flower from the plant nearest the hidden foe. Then she crept away slowly, faster and faster, until she swung to the door of the adjoining room, slid the bolt with stiffening fingers, and fell in a little heap, gasping: "A man—the tramp—is hidden there!" At the same time there was a noise in the conservatory of falling plants and crash of glass, incident to the tramp's escape through the casement rather than be taken like a rat in a trap.

Walter gathered up Pamela in his arms and placed her on a sofa. Then he gave chase, revolver in hand. Soon all Locustville joined in pursuit of the outcast. Every cottager turned out, to a man, to defend his own hearth-stone. The news flew like lightning that Mrs. Timbs had found a burglar hidden in her conservatory, ready to plunder and murder when the household should have retired to rest. Weapons were snatched up, lanterns lighted, and watch-dogs let loose, as if ever tramp waited under cover of darkness for all such preparations of capture! Even the poet came forth in embroidered dressing-gown and cap, his spectacles polished, and a silver-mounted poniard in his grasp. The tramp had vanished as completely as if the earth had swallowed him, and only the rustling of the wind through the trees and the murmur of the river responded to the shouts of the pursuers. When Walter returned to his abode, flushed with the fruitless search, he found Pamela weeping bitterly on the sofa, while Bridget stood by with her apron to her eyes.

"I am not hurt, my pet, and the rascal will not return," said Walter, lavishing endearments on his wife, for his heart began to melt.

"Oh, it's not that!" sobbed Pamela.

"No, indade, it's not that, thin," echoed Bridget, with a sympathetic howl.

"What is it, then?" coaxed Walter.

"Why, he had been here—before!" cried Pamela.

"He had, jist, bad luck to him!" added Bridget, behind her apron.

"Ah! the tramp had been here before. Did you leave the door open?" pursued Walter, with a deceitful smile.

Pamela swept the handkerchief from her eyes with a tragic gesture. Concealment was no longer possible. "What I have suffered this day!" she exclaimed. "You may as well know the worst at once. The silver is gone, and we are ruined. Oh, those darling spoons with the little curly ends, and that duck of a sugar-sifter shaped like a thistle! I shall never have any more."

"The silver gone!" repeated Walter, springing to his feet. "Let me see with my own eyes, for I can scarcely believe it."

He took a candle, and ran up stairs, followed by Pamela and Bridget. He unlocked the closet-door, and produced the bag containing the family plate.

Mistress and maid were dumb. What did it mean?

"The fact is, I was the thief," explained Walter. "I came home at two o'clock to surprise you, and I found the gate ajar, the door unlocked. I had passed the tramp on the road. Neither of you was in the house. I put the silver in the bag, and carried it to the garret, and later took a chance to put it back safely in the closet. Then I slipped out, and spent the afternoon with the poet, in order to return home at the usual hour."

Pamela stared at him rigidly, but warmth and life began to re-animate her frame. Bridget sniffed.

"Let it be a lesson for the future, my love, to be more careful," concluded Walter, with masculine superiority. "I did not intend to speak until the hour of dinner to-morrow, which would become a true Thanksgiving with the re-appearance of the family plate."

"I wonder you are not shamed of yourself to play such tricks," retorted Pamela, finding voice at last. "So like a thoughtless man! I might be worn gray and worried into a fever with such nonsense! Pity you spoke at all!"

Walter's countenance fell under this volley of feminine indignation, and somehow the result seemed rather lame.

"If I had not stolen that silver the tramp might have got it," he reasoned.

Pamela dreamed that night Walter was cook, in the white apron and cap of a French chef, preparing the famous Polynesian pudding, while Bridget had given warning in consequence.

Next morning brought restored peace and sunshine to Walter Timb's interior. Pamela's parents arrived at noon, and of all Locustville the Thanksgiving dinner served in the Gothic cottage was the most enjoyable!

The restored family plate adorned the table, and Pamela's eyes sparkled when they reverted to the treasure. Two notable results became manifest; the front door of the Gothic cottage is always kept locked, and Walter never attemps to enforce marital authority.—Virginia W. Johnson.

LADIES DRESSES.

Novelties in Black Wool, Black Poplin and Other Materials.

The novelty in black wool dresses for the street is the use of rough bison cloth trimmed with black yak (worsted) lace, and these are made suitable for young ladies by adding a vest of red satin or of poppy red velvet pinked in rows of scalops, with also straight wristbands of red velvet, and a sailor tie of red satin to fasten the deep fichu-cellar of yak lace. At the foot of the skirt there may be a box-pleating of black velvet lined with red satin, otherwise the stylish dress is of the rough wool laid plainly over a foundation skirt, with apron drapery edged with lace, and the postilion of simple shape has the red vest, etc., just described. The yak piece lace is also used for drapery, and for puffed cuffs that resemble under-sleeves.

Black poplin with red or golden brown satin stripes is used for street dresses. The stripes are pleated with the color underneath for the skirt, and the vest is formed of such stripes. Another fancy is the used of red or gold or mixed metal braids in bayadere stripes across the front and sides of black poplin or cloth dresses. These braids are repeated on the vest, which may be used in a basque or in a polonaise. The polonaises of black cloth dresses are of very long and simple shapes, sloping away on the sides to show the skirt beneath, and draped very fully behind, yet very simply, as in some cases two loops and two buttons do the entire draping. Black Astrakhan borders, either of the genuine fur or the cloth imitation, are much used on these black wool dresses, and are sometimes in conjunction with silver braid. More elegant visiting and carriage dresses are made of the black heavily repped yet soft silks that resemble Irish poplin, and are called either Victorieuse silks or else Bengaline. This silk forms the basque and the bouffant over-skirt, with a lower skirt of plain or figured velvet, which is now laid in three panel pleats in the front, and side pleats behind. As we have already noted, the most elegant black velvet carriage costumes have panels covered with embroidery done on the fabric, with plastrons of thread lace, and usually some jet ornaments.—Harper's Bazar.

OBJECTED TO THOROUGHBREDS

An Ohio Man Who Thoughts Ordinary Cattle Were Quite Good Enough for Him.

"What's the use of turnin' things upside down an' your pockets inside out over any thoroughbred or extraordinarily gifted stock? What d' ye want in this part o' country with a cow, for instance, as 'll give a washtub full o' milk several times a day? No farmin' man can, or will, live on milk alone; an' after you've used all the butter for the table an' hair-oil purposes you can, you'll have some left on your hands, an' you can't compete with oleomargarine that has no hair. For every extra pint a thoroughbred gives she consumes so much more feed than yer common ole muley 'll keep fat on, an' give enough milk of a mild blue cloyin' tendency, too. Feed 's worth more to us farmers than milk, lots more. Thaint no successful artificial hay an' corn in market that I've run agin.

"Now, there's my neighbor, J. De Smith, he's been improvin' an' improvin' his strain of cattle till the poor man's actually got nothin' left in the world but that one thoroughbred short-horn. He put in most of his time this summer, almost day an' night, on that short-horn, gittin' him ready for the fair.

"On the road to the fair the short-horn, with his cavortin' an' pawin' round in a red blanket, scared three old farm teams till they ran off with several of the best families in the county. The first day of the fair he kicked a well-known young sprig from Washington Township in the pit of the stomach hard enough to pulverize his watch crystal, who, on recovering sufficient wind, immediately set about diligently spreadin' the report that them kind of cattle wouldn't do at all for this climate. In the grand parade of premium stock he took a two-dollar prize, on the last day he run a horn through the most vulnerable part of the President's pants, terrifyin' him an' gainin' his instant an' influential disapproval.

"'Fore De Smith got home his natural arms was most wrenched off, an' entirely so the arms of his best coat; a holdin' that brute, an' several individuals had thrillingly narrow escapes from abruptly violent ends.

"Now where's the pay in collateral, fun or premiums for sich? I tell ye it don't pay. Give me ordinary cattle an' more of the comforts an' emoluments of farmin' an' more rest, an' I'll be calmly satisfied to forego the pomp an' circumstance of a red card at the fair."

Catarrh Can be Cured

That exceedingly disagreeable and very prevalent disease, catarrh, is caused by scrofulous taint in the blood. Hood's Sarsaparilla, by its powerful purifying and vitalizing action upon the blood, speedily removes the cause, and thus effects a radical and permanent cure of catarrh. Those who suffer from its varied symptoms—uncomfortable flow from the nose, offensive breath, ringing and bursting noises in the ears, swelling of the soft parts of the throat, nervous prostration, etc.—should take Hood's Sarsaparilla and be cured.

Serious consequences are liable to ensue if catarrh is not attended to in season. The disease frequently destroys the sense of smell and often develops into bronchitis or pulmonary consumption. Undoubtedly many cases of consumption originate in catarrh. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures catarrh and has even effected remarkable cures of consumption itself, in its early stages. A book containing statements of many cures by Hood's Sarsaparilla, will be sent free to all who send address to C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

The Best Medicine

"I have suffered with catarrh in my head for years, and paid out hundreds of dollars for medicines, but have heretofore received only temporary relief. I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla and now my catarrh is nearly cured, the weakness of my body is all gone, my appetite is good—in fact, I feel like another person." Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best medicine I have ever taken." MRS. A. CUNNINGHAM, Providence, R. I.

Catarrh and Impure Blood

"Hood's Sarsaparilla has helped me more for catarrh and impure blood than anything else I ever used." A. BALL, Syracuse, N. Y.

"I suffered three years with catarrh, and my general health was poor in consequence. When I took Hood's Sarsaparilla I found I had the right remedy. The catarrh is yielding, as Hood's Sarsaparilla is cleansing my blood, and the general tone of my system is improving." FRANK WASHBURN, Rochester, N. Y.

How to Buy a Horse.

An old horseman says: If you want to buy a horse don't believe your own brother. Take no man's word or it. Your eye is your market. Don't buy a horse in harness. Unhitch him and take everything off but his halter, and lead him around. If he has a corn or is stiff, or has any other failing, you can see it. Let him go by himself a way, and if he staves right into anything you know he is blind. No matter how clear and bright his eyes are, he can't see any more than a bat. Back him too. Some horses show their weakness at tricks, in that way when they don't in any other. But, be as smart as you can, you'll get caught sometimes. Even an expert gets caught. A horse may look over so nice and go a great pace and yet have fits. There isn't a man could tell it until something happens. Or he may have a weak back. Give him the whip and off he goes for a mile or two, and then all at a sudden he stops in the road. After a rest he starts again, but he soon stops for good and nothing but a derrick could move him.

The weak points of a horse can be better discovered while standing than while moving.

If he is sound, he will stand firmly and squarely on his limbs without moving any of them, the feet flatly upon the ground, with legs plump and naturally poised; or if the foot is lifted from the ground and the weight taken from it, disease may be suspected, or at least tenderness, which is a precursor of disease. If the horse stands with his feet spread apart, or straddles with his hind legs, there is a weakness in the loins, and the kidneys are disordered. Heavy pulling bends the knees. Bluish, milky cast eyes in horses indicate moon-blindness or something else. A bad tempered horse keeps his ears thrown back. A kicking horse is apt to have scarred legs. A stumbling horse has blemished knees. When the skin is rough and harsh, and does not move easily to the touch, the horse is a heavy eater, and digestion is bad. Never buy a horse whose breathing organs are at all impaired. Place your ear at the side of the heart, and if a wheezing sound is heard it is an indication of trouble.—Rural Record.

The Dishonest Partner.

One of the most frequent and deplorable agents of sudden ruin is the dishonest partner. No business can be managed without mutual confidence between those who conduct it; and though, when we hear that a commercial man has brought himself within reach of the law, we are inclined to doubt if his partner can have been unaware of his malpractices, yet it must be obvious that the dishonesty of one partner too often arises from the unsuspicious simplicity of the other. There are even instances in which no amount of sagacity will save a man from the enterprises of a roguish partner. The following is a very common case: A and B being partners, A dies, and his son succeeds to his share of the business. So long as A was alive the speculative tendencies of B were kept in check; but young A has not the same experience as his father; he has learned to respect B; he looks to him for guidance and if B has made up his mind to extend the business of the firm by new methods, now that he is head partner, the junior partner will generally be a mere tool in his hands. If young A be more fond of pleasure than business he will of course be even less than a tool—a mere cipher, and B will be left to manage matters as he pleases, until he succeeds in his schemes, and proposes to buy A out of the business: or fails and brings A to poverty and disgrace. It is a cruel thing that if B has absconded, A will have to bear the entire brunt of creditors' wrath, and perhaps be criminally punished for his innocence. But partners have learned this lesson so often that it is almost a wonder how any sane man can assume responsibilities without ascertaining the nature and extent of them. It is certainly not for the public interest that the sudden ruin of an honest partner should be pleaded in extenuation of his ignorance or carelessness.—Chambers' Journal.

Saved by the Cashier.

A Wall street friend of mine, who has just returned from the West, told me a rather good story yesterday. Said he:

"I went out to the Yellowstone with a party, and we had a curious adventure. There were in the crowd two brokers, a bank cashier, a railroad man and a couple of Englishmen. In a lonely spot we were suddenly held up by four mounted road agents, who, with carbines leveled at our heads, shouted to us to 'put up our hands.' Our party was pretty badly shaken up, I tell you. We were ordered to step out while one of their men ransacked the coach.

"'Look here, men,' said one of the Englishmen, 'you don't want anything of us. We are traveling with just money enough to pay our expenses. This gentleman here is the cashier of the ——— Bank; but he doesn't carry the bank funds with him, you know.'

"The fellows looked at him a moment, then one of them asked of our companion:

"'Are you really a bank cashier?"

"'Yes,' said he, rather faintly.

"Then,' said the leader of the gang, 'then boys, we're off this hunt. Them gentlemen kin go. We recognize a professional when we see him, and we take off our hats to a bank cashier because he's the boss in our line of business. You can have your wallets, gentlemen, and we hope you'll have a safe journey.'

"And, sir, would you believe it, the rascals actually handed back our things intact, lifted their hats to the cashier and dashed off like the mischief. We were rather scarey about traveling in his company after that, but the poor fellow assured us on his soul he had never robbed a bank in his life, and he attributed it all to the fact that a few rascally cashiers had made the banking business disreputable for a person of refined instincts."—N. Y. Star.

No one can be ill if the blood is pure. Yellow Dock and Sarsararilla root have long been recognized by physicians as blood purifiers. Don't be humbugged by the advertisements of the many quack bitters, but occasionally use Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla, and you will live to a good old age free from all distress of mind and body. Many of our best citizens who long suffered from bad blood indicated by weak kidneys, indigestion, sores, aches, etc., owe their recovery to the use of this remedy.

Long visits, long sermons, long exhortations, and long [illegible] seldom profit those who listen. Life is short. Time is short. Moments are precious. Learn to condense. Prunes are dull if they are only short. We can endure many an ache and ill if it be over soon, while even pleasures grow insipid, and pain intolerable, if they be protracted beyond the limits of reason and convenience. Learn to be short. Lop off branches; stick to the main facts in your case. If you pray, ask for what you would receive, and get through; if you speak, tell your message and hold your peace; boil down two words into one, and three into two. Always learn to be short.

Many who long suffered from indescribable feelings of distress, lame back, aching joints, sores, swellings, weakness of the urinary and digestive organs, unnatural feelings of weariness, headache, nervousness, despondency, sleeplessness, disturbing dreams, partial insanity, etc., after doctoring liver, kidneys, nerves and brain, with the various quack nostrums of the day, and being nearly frightened to death by their alarming advertisements, quietly began using Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla, and were agreeably surprised to quickly find themselves restored to perfect health. No other remedy equals it.

On one occasion while the English naturalist Gould was wandering along the banks of the Thames with a party of friends, a rare laugh was created at his expense. He had climbed a tree for the purpose of exploring the contents of a nest. On suddenly looking down at a hollow formed by two branches of the tree, and which at the time contained a pool of water, he exclaimed: "As I'm a living man, if there is not a large owl here in this hole, looking straight at me." The excitement was intense, but was instantly turned to a shout of merriment, when the naturalist on putting down his hand to seize the supposed owl, discovered that it was simply the reflection of his own image in the water.

Don't make the mistake of doctoring liver and kidneys to cure consumption. If you will lay all other remedies aside and put your trust in Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, it will surely benefit you. Try it for coughs and colds, and see what an excellent remedy it is.

It is stated that the American Tract Society's publications during the year ending with March last aggregated 73,566,000 pages, in addition to seven periodicals with a total circulation of 4,000,000.

Captain Mitchell, of the bark Antoine Sala, New York and Havana trade, came home in May, entirely helpless with rheumatism. He went to the mountains, but receiving no benefit, at his wife's request began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla. He immediately began to improve; in two months his rheumatism was all gone and he sailed in command of his vessel a well man. Hood's Sarsaparilla will help you. Sold by all druggists.

It is proposed to use stiff canvas stretchers in place of the ordinary berths in sleeping cars. They are comfortable, and can be so cleverly stowed away during the day that one would think himself in an ordinary drawing-room car. The canal-packet men knew this fifty years ago.

ALBANY, N. Y.

Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

Dear Sir: About eight years ago I began to suffer from a liver difficulty. During the attacks I experienced severe pain, accompanied by what I cannot describe better than by calling it a drawing in sensation. The agony of it was almost beyond endurance. None of the usual medicines employed in such cases had any effect upon me. From time to time I was laid up and unable to attend to my business.

Finally Mr. Lloyd, a druggist of this city, suggested your Favorite Remedy as an excellent thing for the liver. I had not taken the whole of the first bottle before I found decided relief; the pain passed away, and to my delight I regained the power to enjoy and digest my food without the former distress. Nature seemed to be set going again. I cannot express my appreciation of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy than by telling you that since my personal knowledge of its virtues I have recommended it to a great many of my friends and acquaintances.

Yours, Truly, S. PEPSON.

TECUMSEH, MICH., NOV. 27, 1884

The course of Gov. Cleveland since the election is in marked contrast to that of Mr. Blaine. The President-elect is a man of but few words, but when he talks he speaks to the point. In a recent interview with a representative of the Boston Globe, he remarked:

It goes without saying that the democratic party is made up of merchants, business and working men, and everybody in it certainly desires good times and realizes that all the people must be prosperous to insure that result. We have 55,000,000 of people, almost boundless resources, hundreds of the strongest financial institutions in the world, thousands of enterprising merchants, the most skillful manufacturers and the most intelligent farmers and workingmen on the face of the earth. Now, surely, a country with these characteristics has every qualification for solid, permanent prosperity. It will be my aim, and the aim of all associated with me in the conduct of affairs at Washington, to give the people of the United States a safe, economical and conservative government. The fact that so many business men and manufacturers and workmen voted with the democratic party in this election shows that they were not afraid of a change in the administration. The democratic party, in its Chicago platform, meant what it said and said what it meant and will carry the provisions of that platform which relate to the business interests of the country into effect.

INDUSTRIAL DEMAND OF THE HOUR.

The Philadelphia Times which has been looked upon as the special organ of the Pennsylvania manufacturers has this article, showing that a wise system of tariff reform is one of the great needs of the country at the present time. This article, considering the source from which it comes, is very significant.

Attention has been called frequently of late to the fact that the census figures of 1880 showed that of the vast amount of goods manufactured in the United States but two per cent. was exported, the remaining ninety-eight per cent. being consumed at home. The manufacturing capacity of the country has steadily increased since that date and in a much greater ratio than the home demand, while the export demand remains about the same. The inevitable result is seen in the scores of idle mills and the thousands of workers out of employment.

The extension of our foreign trade in manufactured goods is greatly to be desired at present. Heretofore American manufacturers could practically ignore this trade, leaving it to the manufacturers of Europe. The home demand for iron, steel, machinery and textile fabrics was equal to the production. Production has outrun demand at last and new markets for the surplus must be sought or the paralysis in trade becomes permanent rather than temporary. Especially is this true of the manufacturing industries of the Eastern and Middle States. The South is manufacturing its own cotton to a rapidly increasing extent and the West is largely supplying its own iron, steel and machinery, instead of purchasing these staples in New York and Pennsylvania, as formerly.

Is there a foreign market, within reach of our Eastern seaports, for which American manufactures may compete with a reasonable prospect of success? We believe there is. To the south of the United States is a country comprising an area of eight million square miles and containing forty millions of people. We purchase largely of their coffee, sugar, tropical fruits, timber, hides and other raw materials. They, in return, get the great bulk of their manufactured goods of somebody else. Of the total three hundred millions of imports of these twenty countries we furnish but a little more than forty millions, or one-seventh of the whole amount. The West India Islands annually import goods to the amount of one hundred and sixteen millions, of which the United States supply less than one-third. Here then at our very doors is a trade of nearly five hundred millions, of which we supply only about seventy millions.

It is to the interest of the manufacturers of this city to move earnestly and promptly in this matter. Whatever advantage in this direction can be secured by an active participation in the New Orleans Exposition should not be neglected. But Philadelphia is a seaport with unusual facilities for building up a trade of its own with our Southern neighbors. The way to a prosperous trade with them is to make it. And when this is once established the way will be open to shake hands with the Pacific countries and islands with their five or six hundred millions of import trade, as soon as the Panama Canal opens a short and safe route to those countries. It will be the part of wisdom and prudence for the business men of the United States to devote the next few years almost exclusively to the extension of our export trade in manufactured goods. The manufacturing as well as the agricultural interests of the country have been stimulated quite enough until more markets are found for the staples we make and grow.

TEMPERANCE DEPARTMENT.

EDITED BY A COMMITTEE OF THE UNION PROHIBITION PARTY.

MOTTO:—No License for the Liquor Traffic in any form or for any price.

THE PROHIBITION VOTE.

The attempt to show that the prohibitionists have made no gains over two years ago by a comparison of the votes polled this month with those cast in 1882 is not a fair statement of the case. It is true that in 1882 the prohibition vote in Illinois was 9,068, and that this year it is 11,429, and that in New York the same vote was, in 1882, 25,783, while this year it is only a trifle larger; but it must be borne in mind that 1882 was an off year in politics, when party lines were loosely drawn and men were not forced to meet the influences that are always powerful in a national election. This year the prohibitionists have been traduced, ostracized, and lampooned from one end of the country to the other, and the crack of the party lash has never for a moment ceased to sound in their ears. The men, who, ignoring the appeals of old party and personal friends, the pressure of a heated campaign, and the ridicule of those who were unable to understand the motives that actuated them, walked to the polls and gave utterance to their deep-seated and honest convictions by their ballots, are the men who are always the founders of all great movements among men. Every device known to politics was used to coax and cajole the prohibitionists to return to their party allegiance, and in the event of a refusal to do so every expedient to keep them from the polls was used to its fullest extent. The knowledge that they could not succeed also kept many from voting who disliked to throw away their votes. That the prohibitionists held their own against the bulldozing, obloquy, and abuse they everywhere met shows that their adherence to the principle for which they contended was bassed upon as deep and earnest convictions of right and duty as ever actuated any body of men in a free government. Scores and scores of these men were denounced as abolitionists and black republicans in the early days of the republican party, and the tactics now resorted to by their opponents were tried against them long years ago and failed. In view of all the prohibitionists have had to heroically face since the 8th of June it is simply surprising that they held their own in this vindictive campaign, and the flings and insults they now have put upon them by republicans and the party organs will have no other effect than to solidify their ranks and strengthen their courage.

THE CHIEF DANGER.

Our chief danger is not that the Democrats may get into power and commence a hungry hunt for offices and spoils, as the Republicans expect them to do if they carry the Presidential election. Nor is it that the Republicans may get another four years of power to continue a career of corruption and plunder, as the Democrats dread. Neither of these results, though it might turn out as bad as the opposing party predicts, would be so serious a calamity as that the whole Christian element of the country should be condemned to go on slavishly dividing the vote between parties controlled by trading politicians. We can only, as a people, be preserved from selfishness and corruption by drawing a distinct line between right and wrong in politics as in private life, and eschewing all partnership with evil men and evil methods under whatever pretence. All have, therefore, great reason to be thankful for "prohibition" as a nucleus round which all the good elements of society, south, north, east west, may safely gather a basis of union for all who have the real good of the country at heart, and as a rallying cry to lead a grand crusade of honest principles to glorious victory over the ubiquitous adversary, the liquor traffic.—N. Y. Witness.

ST. JOHN'S CANDIDACY

To the non-believers St. John's candidacy was rather an object of ridicule than aught else. The man's sincerity, as well as the intrinsic merit of his cause, was overlooked in the ridicule heaped upon the weakness of the party. Whilst it is true a great national party ought to have more by far than one issue as the apology for its existence, at the same time whether one believes in the prohibition doctrine or not, nearly every one, whatever his habits or business, does believe in the great underlying reason for agitating prohibition, and that is temperance. Stripped of red tape, prohibition really means "don't get drunk." Whether it goes the right way about it or not to secure what it wants, it is to the credit of the Prohibition Party that it wants nothing but what is good, and for the perpetual good, not only of the nation, but of every individual in it.

The party of Prohibition, in its seeking for individual good, comes nearer being a universal religion than a party, and as such, whilst all may fairly, honorably and wisely differ from it, it is entitled to respect instead of ridicule.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

We have had the license system in this country for more than two hundred years; it has always been, and ever will be, a gigantic fraud and swindle. It has bribed witnesses, courts, jurors and prosecuting attorneys. It has packed the primaries, stuffed ballot-boxes, forged election returns, scoffed at virtue and revelled in vice. It has with its ill gotten gains bought its way into legislative halls. It has sent jurymen reeling drunk into what we call a court of justice. Its disgraceful effects have been seen upon the funeral-train of a martyred President. It destroys home, tramples law under foot, laughs at weeping wives and hungry children, and drives its victims when penniless into the street. It has no conscience, and knows no God, and I am proud to be a citizen of a State where, if manhood and home are to be destroyed through the influence of intoxicating drinks, the destruction will be in violation of rather than by the sanction of law.—Gov. St. John.

Thousands of families have had occasion to try the never failing qualities of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, and they all unite in the praise of this wonderful prescription.

By the way, it is not pleasant to reflect that the defeat of the state ticket retires our very efficient state oil inspector. Wherever republicans have retained or regained a grip upon power the "ruling passion" is yet manifest; and it is said the shadows of the long line of applicants for friend Smith's place are enough to cast a gloom over a nature even as cheerful and as hopeful as his.—Hudson Gazette.

The kind sentiments expressed above are thoroughly appreciated by the person for whom they were intended. But Smith is not gloomy. He has been greased sufficiently to slide out gracefully, and is now engaged in holding his sides from bursting with laughter as he views that "long line of applicants" for his place. It is sweet (for some people) to die for the country, sweeter to live for the country, but sweetest to live on it. You fellows, one thousand strong, who want the "file" inspectorship, don't you think so?—Adrian Record.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

Northern lights have flushed our skies the past week, but went out in Saturday nights rain storm.

The rink is nice, and about five hundred came to see, hear and skate. Napoleon's band played and good skaters came with them. Branch and Curtis of Hillsdale were voted worthy of their reputation, and gave a good exhibition. The only mischance happened to the Manchester company, who unfortunately took a road which led astray and made them late. They were proficients and improved the time, the managers courteously lengthened. If prizes had been awarded the first would have been carried to Manchester by Nettie Severance. All is well. Brooklyn has another very good public hall, and its christening party was a success.

RAISIN RUMBLINGS.

The young men on the west side of the river will engage in a big hunt on Thanksgiving day.

Our usually quiet community has been stirred up to the bottom with a real live sensation during the past week. Chas. Luce, a well-to-do farmer, has been selling off his personal effects for several weeks preparatory to selling a new patent heater for stove pipes. About a week ago he went to Hudson to establish an agency there and begin business in earnest, Mr. Parker, another well-to-do farmer lives on a farm adjoining Mr. Luce's. About the same time that Mr. Luce started on his heater trip Mrs. Parker went to visit some friends at Blissfield, and neither of them have yet returned to the bosom of their families. Judging from surface indications during the past summer the neighbors have concluded that the protracted absence of the two means something and that they have probably gone into the heater business together. The wife and husband who are left behind have the sympathy of the community in their affliction.

Oscar Palmer, when on a visit to Boston four years ago, purchased an old relic, which is a decided curiosity. It is a sheet about two feet by eighteen inches in size, on one side of which is a facsimile of the first newspaper published in America—The Boston News-Letter, dated "from Monday April 17th to Monday April 24th 1704." On the reverse side of the sheet are pictures of the first railway passenger train in America, which ran from Albany to Schenectady in 1831; the first steamboat in the world, which was launched on the Delaware river in 1786; the first steam locomotive, invented by Geo. Stephenson, which was tested in September 1825; the old liberty bell, which proclaimed liberty throughout all the land to all the inhabitants thereof, from Independence Hall on July 4th, 1876; Faniel Hall in Boston; the house in which Thomas Jefferson wrote the Declaration of Independence; and a view of New York City in 1850. He has got it substantially framed, and will preserve it among his household treasures.

The prospectus season is at hand, and the HERALD this week has several new announcements of that kind. Subscriptions will be received for all these papers in connection with the HERALD at club rates.

Mr. Osmun has all the qualifications necessary for the responsible position, and will, we prophesy, give entire satisfaction, not only to the governor, but to the thousand and one people, from all parts of the state, with whom he will be brought into contact at the executive office.

Brooklyn Exponent: Looking over our books we see a long array of subscribers who owe us. Some are far away, lost to sight although to memory dear. Some are now angels in heaven, but they owe us just the same.

Last Thursday evening, Mr. and Mrs. Dan. Zellars were the recipients of a large surprise party. Their friends stormed the house, took possession and passed a very enjoyable evening. "Uncle Billy" Brezie, who is an adept at such business, concocted the mischief.

Great inducements to purchasers of Pianos, Organs and Sewing Machines is made by B. J. Collar of Adrian (for Tecumseh and vicinity,) during the holidays. Remember he represents the best makers of organs and pianos made in the world, such as Estey, Cottage and Clough & Warren organs; Chickering, Haines Bros, Sohmer & Co., Christie & Son's pianos. Immense stock on hand.

Tecumseh's enterprising grocer, Henry McClure, has rented one of the new stores in Exelby's block at Britton and will open a branch establishment there at an early day. He will keep a complete stock of groceries and will add some goods in other lines suitable for a general country store. Mr. McClure, by his industry and enterprise, has built up an immense trade here, and we believe he will succeed in his venture.

Winter has come at last and probably come to stay. In view of this fact the following hint from an exchange will come in play:

Cracks in floors, around the mouldboard, or in other parts of a room, may be neatly and permanently filled by thoroughly soaking newspapers in paste made of one pound of flour, three quarts of water, and a tablespoonful of alum, thoroughly mixed. The mixture will be about as thick as putty, and may be forced into the cracks with a case knife. It will harden like papier mache.

Marshall Statesman: Monday evening the second fatal accident since its completion occurred on the Michigan and Ohio railway. Daniel Merrill, an old man, 65 years of age, was walking on the track towards his home in Bedford, when the way freight west overtook him. He paid no attention to the repeated whistles and remained on the rails till the locomotive struck him. He was killed instantly. He leaves a wife and family and a life insurance of $1,000.

Morenci Observer: A woman, of this village, came into Mr. Morgan's office on Wednesday afternoon and told a story of the whipping she had just received from her husband, and the bruises on her face but too plainly corroborated her statement. She wanted his advice on the subject, and on being told that the husband was liable to a fine and imprisonment, woman-like she relented and said she would forgive him this time, but if he ever did it again no telling what would be done.

Adrian Press: If any further evidence were needed that Providence mercifully directed the election of Cleveland, it can be found in the fact that a Tecumseh man declared that he would name his heir expectant and apparent, after the successful candidate for president in case it happened to be that kind of an heir, and it so happened. Now Chet Haynes is an ardent republican, but he heaves a sigh of relief when he thinks that his son can bear the name of an honest man, and in merciful regard for that son we claim that the Almighty took compassion and directed Mulligan Blaine's defeat. Grover Cleveland Haynes, we greet you.

The Marshall Statesman has this to say of the new railroad project from that city north to the straits:

The attitude of the present railroad commissioner, Gen. Innes, has not been favorable to new railroad ventures, but as the expiration of his term of office is near at hand, the last obstacle to the building of the north line will be removed, and we may look for a movement at any time. The affairs of the company are now in exactly the shape desired for a long period back, and advantage will soon be taken of it. The principal owners of the M. & O. want the line pushed north at once. They have the money to build it. They have also unbounded confidence in the project; and now that there is clear sailing, a general order for an advance along the whole line may be issued any day.

"The Masher," which is the name of Geo. S. Tiffany's new patent, is a crusher which may be constructed so as to crush ores, clay, coal, cones, burned fire clay, stone, &c. The difficulty experienced by manufacturers in working fire clay led to its design. It is especially adapted to the crushing of clay clods. As constructed for clay working the Masher opens twelve inches to receive the clay and then closes completely, forcing the clay between the jaws. It will work dry or wet clay so that it will pass through rollers, or be much better prepared for the direct use of the brick or tile machine, or for any grinding or soaking process. The jaws may be readily changed for those of greater or less breadth and thickness. The machines will be adapted to the purposes for which they may be required. Patented Nov. 11, 1884. Mr. Tiffany purposes to work up the sale of this machine as rapidly as possible. We hope he has "struck it rich."

GOV. CLEVELAND'S RELATIVES.

Two of them, By Marriage, Reside in Tecumseh Our Citizens will Have Special Interest in the New President.

We clip the following interview from the Evening News:

TOLEDO, Nov. 24.—A reporter called upon Mrs. N. B. Bacon, of this city, to interview her on the various rumors going the rounds of the press in regard to who will officiate as mistress of the White house during the administration of her brother. Mrs. Bacon is a most courteous and cultivated lady, and is much esteemed by those who know her. She seemed greatly amused by the various ludicrous rumors regarding her brother's alleged contemplated marriage, and to a query of the reporter as to whether or not there was any truth in the current report that Mr. Cleveland was to be married, she replied: "The report is entirely without foundation so far as I know, and I would probably know as much about such a step on the part of my brother as any person."

As to the rumors that a widowed sister would be with Mr. Cleveland at the White house, she said: "The plans are not as yet matured, but there are no widowed or divorced sisters. All are married save one. The eldest is Mrs. Hastings, who is at Ceylon, Ind., and of course she is too far away to be considered. The next is Mrs. Hoyt, of Fayetteville, Onondaga county, N. Y. near Syracuse; then myself and Mrs. L. T. Yeomans, of Walworth, Wayne county, N. Y., near Rochester. My youngest sister is Miss R. A. Cleveland, who is with my brother. Her tastes are strictly literary, and since her mother's death she has had a chance to gratify her inclinations in that direction, and I surmise she will be for the most part with my brother."

Mrs. Bacon refuted the many silly, unfounded reports as to the slight affection the sisters felt toward their brother, and said that they had been brought up together and always had the highest regard for him. She is next in point of age to Mr. Cleveland, and spoke feelingly of their companionship. She remarked that her brother is a man who assiduously applies himself to his work, making it a practice of working till midnight; and also, that determination was one of his prominent characteristics, and that not being a politician, he would not allow himself to be swerved from the right by such.

As a matter of interest to our readers we mention the fact that our town is honored with the possession of two relatives of Mr. and Mrs. Bacon. Mr. N. B. Bacon's mother, who recently died at an advanced age, was a sister of Sherman B. Terry of this village and Orrin Terry of Waterville, N. Y., who frequently visits Tecumseh and has many acquaintances here. Mr. Bacon the elder, resided here a few months, many years ago, when N. B. Bacon the architect was a boy. Mrs. P. J. Welling and Mr. Bacon the architect are first cousins, and thus Mrs. Welling is first cousin by marriage to Mrs. Bacon, Gov. Cleveland's sister. Mrs. Bacon is a most estimable woman and has a model home and Mr. Bacon is a man of prominence in his profession.

We esteem it quite an honor that we have a personal acquaintance with them, and have enjoyed the hospitality of their pleasant home.

Our marriage notices announce the double wedding at which Mrs. Chadwick parted with her two charming daughters, Misses Bricena and Adah. The young ladies have moved in society here for several years and have enjoyed the esteem which their worth and accomplishments merited. Mr. Crane is one of our most respected young men, and Mr. Robison, although having but little acquaintance here, stands equally high where he is known. We gladly double our usual allowance of congratulations and heartily wish these parties a bon voyage up the hills and through the valleys of life.

The dance given by the Owl Club last evening was a decided success in every particular. About 35 couples were present and everybody expressed themselves as well pleased. The music was excellent, and the supper at W. T. Eccles' was one of his best efforts. The "Owls" are to be congratulated on their success.

Lifted Up

A happy surprise it was to Mr. A. R. Norton, of Bristol, Conn., when ATHLOPHOROS put him on his feet, and sent him cheerfully about his business. Let him tell his own story:

"About three weeks ago I was taken with a severe crick in the back. For four days I was unable to turn in bed without help, and when lifted up could not stand on my feet. I was induced to try ATHLOPHOROS, after all the usual remedies failed. In 20 minutes after taking the first dose I could bear my weight upon my feet. In two days I was able to get about and attend to business. In two other cases which have come to my knowledge its use has been attended with the same results."

A poor man in Philadelphia had to borrow a dollar to buy a bottle of ATHLOPHOROS. On account of his poverty his name shall remain a Secret. He had suffered terribly from Rheumatism. He gratefully writes:

"I took my first dose Tuesday afternoon, and on Wednesday, after but seven doses, I had in my shoes not even a single pain. Then I reduced the dose one half and it is the remainder of the bottle. I was able to be steady at work the following day, when I took a severe cold and was unable to use my left hand. I purchased another bottle and by bedtime I found relief. The medicine is all you claim for it."

Investigate ATHLOPHOROS all you please! Find all the fault you choose with it! and yet the fact remains, that it is doing what no other medicine ever could do for Rheumatism and Neuralgia.

If you cannot get ATHLOPHOROS of your druggist, we will send it express paid, on receipt of regular price—one dollar per bottle. We prefer that you buy it from your druggist, but if he hasn't it, do not be persuaded to try something else, but order at once from us as directed.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE.

Rome, N. Y., is Visited by a Fearful Fire—The Town Makes a Narrow Escape.

ROME, N. Y., November 25.—Shortly after ten o'clock yesterday morning fire was discovered in the office of G. V. Selden's lumber yard and planing mill on Front Street. The alarm was quickly given and the fire department soon responded. A strong west wind prevailed and the fire spread rapidly threatening to sweep across the southern portion of the city above the New York Central Railroad. The lumber office and sheds with R. A. Putnam's carpenter shop on Front Street, together with large piles of lumber extending southward through to John Street and the tenement row known as the Long Block, on John Street, were all ablaze by two o'clock, and it seemed as if nothing could save Martin's livery, Whitman & Burrill's dairy depot, the new Temperance Hotel, Schoolmaster's block and Barlham's carriage works. Mayor Mitchell telephoned to Utica for aid, but in half an hour the local fire department had succeeded in heading off the fire at the several points of progress, and the call for aid was countermanded. The property and buildings named, except the easterly end of the Long Block, were consumed. The fire was unquestionably incendiary. G. N. Selden loses about $25,000 and has an insurance of $18,000; Owens, Day & Co., who owned the Putnam shop and the Long Block, lose $30,000, mostly covered by insurance. The families of Jacob Oehm, Robert Orr and Frank Passett, tenants of the Long Block, lost all their household effects. They are poor and had no insurance. The Mayor offers a reward of $500 for the detection of any incendiary. Rome narrowly escaped a terrible scorching.

BROOKLYN, November 25.—A fire yesterday morning in the clothing store of Lewis Jacobs, 390 Fulton Street, caused a loss of $16,000; insurance $10,000.

TERRIBLE CYCLONE.

Passes Over St. John the Baptist Parish, La.—Two Persons Killed and Several Houses Destroyed.

NEW ORLEANS, November 25.—Saturday night a cyclone passed through St. John the Baptist parish on the Mississippi River, just above here, sweeping over a portion of the Whitney, or St. Martin and Malarat plantations, completely destroying all the residences on both places. At the time a large number of persons were in the St. Martin house, including a number of ladies, but all managed to escape but Mr. Anotale Perrett, a young man, who was almost instantly killed. Mr. Malarat, whose residence was also destroyed, was afterward found lying in the yard dangerously hurt, and died from the effects of his injuries. Several other houses and some negro cabins were destroyed. Mr. Malarat was a brother-in-law of the celebrated French writer and historian Michelet, author of the history of "Civilization" and other works.

Confirmations by the New York Board of Aldermen.

NEW YORK, November 25.—Sent to the Board of Aldermen yesterday the nomination of Stephen B. French to succeed to the vacancy left by the expiration of his own term May, 1883, and the Board confirmed the nomination. A Second communication from the Mayor was read nominating John McClave as Police Commissioner to succeed Joel W. Mason, whose term had expired. The nomination of Mr. McClave was confirmed and he was appointed, his term to begin May, 1884. The nominations of French and McClave were wholly unexpected by the Aldermen who were members of the County Democracy. They were taken entirely by surprise and did not know what to say. The Tammany men and the Republicans were prepared for the emergency and voted solidly for the confirmation of the two Commissioners.

General Jail Delivery.

TYLER, Texas, November 24.—A bold and partially successful jail delivery took place here Saturday night. Albert Starnes, a negro murderer, sentenced to ten years imprisonment, was the leader. He and a noted horse thief secreted themselves behind a blanket in the inner hallway. About ten o'clock as jailer Weaver entered the hall to lock up for the night he was set upon, bound and gagged. Taking the key the prisoners were soon released. Among the first out was one H. Howard, a negro awaiting sentence for murder, who gave the alarm, thus interrupting the process of release, but fifteen of the prisoners got away. Pursuit was at once organized but none of the men have been recaptured. Two bloodhounds will be put on the track.

Conflict of Authority in Oregon.

PORTLAND, Ore., November 25.—A very serious conflict of authorities in Lincoln County, Washington Territory, is feared. At a recent election voters were required to decide whether Sprague or Davenport should be the county seat. The contest was very close and bitter. Sprague claims to have received more votes, but the authorities at Davenport refuse to surrender the county records. Yesterday a sheriff's posse started for Davenport to demand the records. About forty armed men are at Davenport to resist them. A hostile meeting is apprehended.

Horribly Mangled by a Train.

JACKSON, Mich., November 25.—Patrick O'Brien, a cooper of this city, was found on a side track near the Michigan Central depot Sunday morning, mangled almost beyond recognition. His head and right leg were severed from the body, and the brains and intestines scattered along the track for several rods. O'Brien was thirty-five years old. He leaves a widow and three young children in very poor circumstances. As he was temperate in his habits it is thought by many that he was killed by footpads, robbed and subsequently placed on the track to be run over by the cars.

Will Sail Under the British Flag.

PHILADELPHIA, November 24.—The International Navigation Company which recently purchased the four American-built steamships of the American Steamship Company, is seriously considering the running of these steamers under the British flag, as at present. An officer of the company said Saturday that it was solely a matter of protection that now keeps the American flag where it is. Under the British flag these steamers could be run at considerably less cost because British officers and seamen could be employed so much cheaper.

Downright Cruelty

To permit yourself and family to "Suffer"
With sickness when it can be prevented and cured so easily
With Hop Bitters!!!

Having experienced a great deal of "Trouble" from indigestion, so much so that I came near losing my Life.
My trouble always came after eating any food
However light
And digestible,
For two or three hours at a time I had to go through the most
Excruciating pains.
"And the only way I ever got"
"Relief?"
Was by throwing up all my stomach contained. No one can conceive the pains that I had to go through, until
"At last"
I was taken "So that for three weeks I lay in bed and
Could eat nothing!
My sufferings were so that I called two doctors to give me something that would stop the pain, their Efforts were no good to me.
At last I heard a good deal
"About your Hop Bitters!
And determined to try them."
Got a bottle—in four hours I took the contents of
One!
Next day I was out of bed, and have not seen a
"Sick!"
Hour, from the same cause since.
I have recommended it to hundreds of others. You have no such.

FOUR POINTS Prepared by an entirely NEW METHOD. Composed of the PUREST MATERIALS. WILL NOT INJURE THE FABRIC. WILL CLEANSE WITHOUT RUBBING.

You can do a large washing without any rubbing, use the boiling process instead. You can save Time, Labor, Fuel, Soap and Clothing.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.

Cut up fine and dissolve one half bar in half gallon of hot water. Pour half this dissolved soap into a tub with just sufficient hot water to cover a boiler full of clothes. Then put the clothes in to soak, rubbing plenty of soap in the most soiled parts. Be sure that the water is hot; soak the clothes half an hour; stir them occasionally so that they may get the full benefit of the hot suds; pour the remainder of the dissolved soap into the boiler, adding sufficient water to cover the clothes; wring them lightly out of the suds. Soap the stained spots and place loosely in the boiler, boil from 20 to 30 minutes, rinse well, blue and hang to dry. Do not crowd the boiler too full. The same soaking water may be used for further boiling by adding a little soap to each boiler-full of clothes. Flannels and prints should not be boiled, only a little rubbing required after soaking. This soap will cleanse clothing as thoroughly as any other without the use of the boiler. We prefer and recommend the boiling process as in itself a cleansing process, saving labor, the wear of the wash-board, and being the best disinfectant known, it is easier to boil the dirt out than to rub it out. You can cleanse perfectly the finest fabric without injury; the finest point lace and lace curtains. Soak point lace in hot suds made with this soap, press water out with the hands; boil after 5 minutes in clean suds made with this soap, rinse thoroughly, press carefully between the folds of a towel, roll in a dry towel, and iron between pieces of old flannel. Soak curtains 20 to 30 minutes and boil 5 to 20 minutes, rinse, stretch on frame, or pin every scallop to carpet over a sheet to dry; no ironing required.

Be sure and ask for ELECTRIC-LIGHT SOAP, and take no other.

AYER'S Ague Cure

WE WARRANT AYER'S AGUE CURE

to cure every case of Fever and Ague, Intermittent or Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Bilious Fever, and Liver Complaint caused by malaria. In case of failure, after due trial, dealers are authorized, by our circular dated July 1st, 1882, to refund the money.

WARREN LELAND,

whom everybody knows as the successful manager of the Largest Hotel Enterprises

of America, says that while a passenger from New York, on board a ship going around Cape Horn, in the early days of emigration to California, he learned that one of the officers of the vessel had cured himself, during the voyage, of an obstinate disease by the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Since then Mr. LELAND has recommended AYER'S SARSAPARILLA in many similar cases, and he has never yet heard of its failure to effect a radical cure.

Some years ago one of Mr. LELAND'S farm laborers bruised his leg. Owing to the bad state of his blood, an ugly scrofulous swelling or lump appeared on the injured limb. Horrible feeling of the skin with burning and darting pains through the lump, made life almost intolerable. The leg became enormously enlarged, and running ulcers formed, discharging great quantities of extremely offensive matter. No treatment was of any avail until the man, by Mr. LELAND'S direction, was supplied with AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, which allayed the pain and irritation, healed the sores, removed the swelling, and completely restored the limb to use.

Mr. LELAND has personally used

for Rheumatism, with entire success; and, after careful observation, declares that, in his belief, there is no medicine in the world equal to it for the cure of Liver Disorders, Gout, the effects of high living, Salt Rheum, Sores, Eruptions, and all the various forms of blood diseases.

We have Mr. LELAND'S permission to invite all who may desire further evidence in regard to the extraordinary curative powers of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA to see him personally either at his mammoth Ocean Hotel, Long Branch, or at the popular Leland Hotel, Broadway, 27th and 28th Streets, New York.

Mr. LELAND'S extensive knowledge of the good done by this unequalled eradicator of blood poisons enables him to give inquirers much valuable information.

HOCKING VALLEY TROUBLES.

A Number of the Leaders in the Strike to be Arrested—Money Being Raised to Continue the Seige

COLUMBUS, Ohio, November 25.—About forty of the leaders connected with the recent attack on Murray City and destruction of property in the Hocking Valley, are to be arrested. It is feared this action may bring on such a turn of affairs as to demand the aid of the whole State military. The strikers had just arranged for a continued seige by raising subscriptions in New York, Cincinnati and other cities. This will demoralize things all around, and misgivings are generally entertained that a crisis has now come in the Hocking Valley strike.

NEW YORK, November 25.—It was reported at the Central Labor Union's meeting Sunday that nearly $800 had been collected during the week for the Hocking Valley miners. The sparrers are to be interviewed in the cause and a benefit is proposed, at which Sullivan and other noted pugilists will be asked to take part. Mr. Vanatsdale, of Madison Square Garden, said that it was impossible to let them have the Garden free, but if they were short of money Mr. Vanderbilt would chip in the money for the Garden. The matter is still undecided.

Cremation of the Dead.

NEW YORK, November 25.—The United States Cremation Company has laid the corner stone of a large crematory at Mount Olivet, L. I. It is about 200 feet square, and will cost $30,000. The building will be of brick and marble, with furnace in the rear. The retort will be thirty-six inches high, thirty-two inches wide, and nine feet long. The flames will not come in contact with the body. Four hours heating will bring the retort to 2,500° Fahrenheit, at which point incineration takes place. The volatile gases resultant from combustion will be decomposed in the intense heat. It is estimated that forty minutes will be required to consume a body of 100 pounds weight, leaving about four per cent. of pure white pearly ashes. In the basement will be provided a refrigidarium where bodies may await the arrival of friends; an atelier, where an autopsy can be made; a caldarium for possible cases of suspended animation; and an edicularium, or urn room. Above the furnace a temple is to be erected at a cost of $20,000, with a chapel for funeral services. In the center aisle of the chapel will be a catafalque, on which the coffin will be placed, a pall falling to cover it. Then it will be lowered to the furnace below, and the services and incineration proceed at once and the same time.

An Injunction Against Issuing Stock.

TRENTON, N. J., November 25.—An order has been granted by Judge Nixon of the United States Supreme Court, on petition of William B. Dinsmore, citing the New Jersey Central Railroad Company, to show cause why an injunction should not be issued restricting and enjoining the issuing, causing or permitting to be issued any shares of stock or any bonds or other evidences of indebtedness of the company to the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad Company, or their receivers, or to any person or persons. In behalf of the petitioner it sets forth his claim that the provisions of the lease declare the two corporations purporting to authorize the issuance of stocks and bonds is illegal. Questions so raised are now under consideration of the court, that a committee shall be appointed by the company for the issuance of $50,000 of stock and that if it is issued it will increase the number of shares of capital stock, and the indebtedness of the company will diminish in a proportionate degree.

Repudiating an Election Affidavit.

CHICAGO, November 25.—Simon Strausser, Republican Judge of Elections in the disputed precinct of the Eighteenth ward, who, Saturday night, made an affidavit that the figures on the poll book had been changed since his signature was affixed, makes another affidavit, saying that it was procured from him by false pretenses, that he thought it was a transcript of his testimony before the grand jury; that he was sick and under the influence of chloral. He declares that he does not know how many votes were cast for Leman or Brand, and that he saw no evidence of fraud.

New Jersey Legislature Republican.

SALEM, November 25.—The recount of the Senatorial vote of Salem County upon which the completion of the State Senate depends, commenced yesterday. All the townships had been recounted at adjournment with the exception of Salem City. Errors in favor of both candidates have been discovered, but so evenly divided that there is little doubt of the election of Wyatt Mills, the Republican candidate, by about thirteen majority. His election will give the Republicans a majority of two in the Senate and fourteen on joint ballot.

The Plenary Council.

BALTIMORE, November 25.—The Plenary Council discussed the question of divorce yesterday. It is understood that if any change is made in the church rules on this subject it will be toward greater severity. The subject of parochial schools will soon come up. Archbishop McQuade, of Rochester, N. Y., says it is against the rules of the church to send children to public schools when parochial schools are accessible.

The Chicago Paper Company's Building Burned.

CHICAGO, November 25.—The Chicago Paper Company's building, 181 Monroe Street, was burned last night. They lose $65,000. The loss on building is $15,000; Rubel Bros., printers, lose $15,000; Dr. Sykes, patent medicines, $15,000. Other small losses raise the amount to $100,000, partially insured.

An Old Couple Robbed by Burglars.

AKRON, Ohio, November 25.—Jeremiah Fritz and wife, residing at Doylestown, Wayne County, this State, were awakened yesterday morning by two masked men, who pointed cocked revolvers at the old people and demanded their money. Fritz gave the burglars $600, when they departed threatening death if a noise was made.

Strike Against a Reduction.

TAUNTON, Mass., November 25.—Four hundred and fifty weavers of the Whittenden mills quitted work yesterday morning, owing to a cut-down of ten per cent. Work will begin Tuesday morning for the rest of the week, the managers having promised a restoration of wages.

A Dividend.

CHICAGO, November 25.—The Directors of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway Company yesterday declared the usual dividend two per cent. on the preferred stock and three and one-half on the common stock—payable December 26.

A Georgia paper is inclined to believe that the fancy for Jersey cattle is a craze.

When pain from Rheumatism or Neuralgia is intense, people are apt to throw away a great deal of money in search of relief. They needn't do it. Says G. H. Hotchkiss, 327 Grand St., New Haven, "After enduring intense suffering for six months from Rheumatism, employing four different physicians, without relief, and spending many dollars for medicines, I accidently heard of ATHLOPHOROS, and tried it. Three bottles cured me entirely in less than three weeks' time."

Made only by C. I. Hood & Co. Lowell, Mass.

1831 THE CULTIVATOR AND 1885

Country Gentleman.

THE BEST OF THE AGRICULTURAL WEEKLIES.

The Country Gentleman is the Leading Journal of American Agriculture. In amount and practical value of contents, in extent and ability of correspondence, in quality of paper and style of publication, it occupies the first rank. It is believed to have no superior in either of the three chief divisions of Farm Crops and Processes,

Horticulture and Fruit Growing,
Live-Stock and Dairying.

While it also includes all minor departments of rural interest, such as the poultry yard, entomology, bee-keeping, greenhouse and grapery, veterinary replies, farm questions and answers, a single reading department, a summary of the news of the week, its market reports are unusually complete, and much attention is paid to the prospects of the crops, as throwing light upon one of the most important of all questions—when to buy and when to sell. It is liberally illustrated and is intended to improve, in a continually increasing degree, and in the best sense of the term, a

LIVE AGRICULTURAL NEWSPAPER.

Although the Country Gentleman has been greatly enlarged by increasing its size from 16 to 20 pages weekly, the terms continue as heretofore, when paid strictly in advance: One copy, one year, $2.50; Four copies, $10; and an additional copy for the year free to the sender of the club; Ten copies, $20; and an additional copy for the year free to the sender of the club.

All new subscribers for 1885, paying in advance now will receive the paper weekly from our receipt of the remittance, to January 1st, 1885, without charge.

MABLEY'S

GLORIOUS SUCCESS.

The unparalleled run on Mabley's Bankrupt Bargains the past week has set the town a talking; certain merchants are green with envy at our bustling, rushing business and wonder why they can't get a share of it. They say it is a shame that we should cut down prices so low that they cannot make a living. We are only exercising a privilege this glorious Republic extends to all—that is, conducting our own business after our own methods.

OUR BANKRUPT BARGAINS

Were purchased from large wholesale firms in the east, who recently failed. Mr. Mabley bought them from 40 to 60 Cents on the Dollar—that is on the original cost of manufacture, so you can see we can sell them lower than other houses own their goods for and yet make a satisfactory profit. Instead of merchants complaining about us they should thank us, for we bring trade here from every county in the district, from all over the state, and as we cannot possibly wait upon them all we afford grumbling merchants a chance of catching those we hav'nt time to wait upon. If they would mark their goods at a fair margin and work or sell more of them they might in time gain some recognition from the people.

We Work for all we Get,

And give the people full value for their money.

We received 25 more large cases of those Bankrupt Goods last week, and this week we intend to offer greater "Drives" than ever. Last week we had a tremendous rush, the goods seemed to "walk away." Our sales were far ahead of the corresponding week of last year. We sold last week $5.400, $5.400.

This is more than twice as much as any other clothing house in the city received.

We are well prepared for a similar rush this week. Below are a few specimen prices which we will guarantee full 20 per cent. below other dealers' cost prices. Remember these are Legitimate Bankrupt Bargains!

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

It is reported at Britton that our church is not safe, that it is liable to fall at any time. We want it distinctly understood that there cannot persons enough get in at once to cause a smashup. Only a cyclone will ever cause a fall. Oh, ye of little faith at Britton, how long shall we plead with you?

Who ever saw such fine weather for the time of year.

Mr. Joe Pennington is at his sister's Mrs. D. Allen. He has one of Job's comforters on one of his hands to pass the time away with.

Mr. J. C. Palmer had a fine spring olt hooked to death last Friday.

Mr. Floyd Florence had the end of his thumb cut off while putting the feeders of a hay press in their proper place. Having passed through several surgical operations before he dressed the wound without a Surgeon's assistance.

Mr. Henry Acherman who has been living at Burt Morley's for the past few years, started for Buffalo Saturday night to visit his mother and spend the winter.

Miss Ella Pattison will make it her home with Mrs. Waring this winter. We are glad to welcome her back again.

Miss Carrie Thompson has been visiting her cousin Miss Ella Cadmus for the past few days.

Miss Ada and Mr. Dean Loree, spent Thanksgiving with their sister, Mrs Albert Lucking, of Detroit.

The American Express Co. have charge of the express business here now; the change was made Dec. 2nd.

Mr. Sid Smith, of St. John, Clinton co. made his friends and relatives a visit. He is attending school at Ann-Arbor now.

Mr. Lafe Pocklington and Miss Anna Luce, who were married last week returned from their pleasure trip Monday eve. It does not discourage us to see others made happy if we are not.

The members of the Literary will meet on Friday eve. in the lecture room of the church, and will carry out a short program, after which they will elect officers for the ensuing term.

Rev. W. J. Clack has been suffering with an attack of rheumatism for the past few days.

Mr. Will Clack, son of Rev. Clack, arrived at his father's Tuesday, and will make them a visit.

Mrs. and Miss Ella Hall and Mrs. David McNair, of Tecumseh started for Brooklyn N. Y. on Thursday of last week. Mrs. Hall and Ella will spend the winter with Mr. and Mrs. R. T. Bush. Mrs. McNair will make them a visit and return about Christmas.

Misses Florence French, May McElroy and Mattie Consaul of Adrian, were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Gove and Miss Ida Pocklington, from Wednesday until Saturday, returning home on the evening train Saturday, having enjoyed their vacation very pleasantly.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

Eight hundred should have been given as the number at our Rink consecration, and the crowd thickens there day and night.

There is talk of having a dramatic entertainment at Union hall, for the benefit of Robert Irwin Post, and talk of most everything else.

Raisin is below pre-eminence yet. One woman skipping out with her affinity is no great thing; for the gentleman had the usual amount of generosity, and paid traveling expenses for two, but when married men resign their office of Presiding Elder and privilege of spanking the children, to go off alone on an unlimited excursion, it places the ladies left behind in an awkward light. Four of the married men in this vicinity, have lately become so tired of their home made harness, as to drop their mantles of responsibility and start on their anniversary wedding trip; but they either possessed too little cash or too much economy, to go in the common style of the valley tourist. One got discouraged by not having his fires built properly, and came home the first week. His wife looks as if his repentance was worse to bear than his transgression. The others were provided with revolvers and things, besides any amount of proof, that marriage and disgruntlement are one and the same. Some of their surplus information was left with friends, along with a slight to the calico club. They did not care enough for any woman, to incur the expense of an extra ticket; so any sympathy left over will be thankfully received.

Thanksgiving was observed properly in spite of these flitting blessings and if any one expects the lady with four or five to mourn, look wilted, run home to pa, and upset the plans of all her relation by donating a baby apiece, they will be disappointed. She will assume her husband's repudiated share in the family, and believing her duty to be, take care of her children first, and let the rest fuss. Will keep the hired man at work, and hinder the other being missed.

MACON MUSIC.

Miss Susie Osgood commenced teaching in the Mills district on Monday.

The Corners school closes this week. There will be one week vacation. Mr. Sudborough, of Adrian, will take charge of the higher room for the winter term.

Mr. Freeman left for his home in Leslie Monday morning.

Mary Richard came home to spend Thanksgiving.

Jessie Coller and wife, of Milan, came to Macon to attend the anniversary of Jessie's father and mother.

Frank Augustus started for Hillsdale Co. last Monday.

Last Tuesday, the 27th ult., being Mr. and Mrs. Lester Coller's twenty-fifth anniversary, a number of their friends determined to give them a surprise. Accordingly about ninety broke in upon them in the early part of the evening. The evening was spent in social chat and n reviewing the important changes of the past twenty-five years. A bountiful supper added to the enjoyment of all. At a late hour the company dispersed, all wishing Mr. & Mrs. Coller many more happy years.

Last Sunday was historical day at the M. E. church. Mr. Kerridge gave the history of the Macon church as well he could from the data which he was able to gather from different ones in the place. He referred in a very fitting manner to the ministers who came to Michigan when it was a vast wilderness, and endured the hardships of pioneer life. Altogether the services were very interesting.

HOLLOWAY HASH.

Our new corset factory is just booming. Mrs. Dunham has had rooms fitted up over the store of Kelly. Hoxsie & Co., and having secured the services of several practical corset-makers from Detroit, she is now turning them out double quick. We understand that agents are meeting with remarkable success, taking orders through the country, and the probabilities are that more help will be required in a very short time to keep up with the orders as they come in. Who says that Cleveland's election has slaughtered business?

And now another calamity has befallen us as a people. Jack the giant-killer has taken his departure and sorrow has settled down upon us like a London fog. John feels the loneliness of the situation as the burden of the care of the family will fall upon him now. Jack was a good boy and we shall miss him. For a few weeks before he left us his health was very poor and it required an immense amount of whiskey and quinine to keep him up, and we feel it was best for him to seek a warmer clime. In the meantime we shall look for his return with the Spring flowers.

Mrs. Fowler is improving very rapidly and begins to use her hand a little.

Wm. Cox is out again and we notice him down to the post office occasionally. Say Bill, that is better than laying on your back and taking pizen every hour.

Our new blacksmith, Mr. Lewis, is getting a good run of custom. On Monday last he turned away four jobs of horse-shoeing for want of time. That don't look as though Holloway was dead.

B. Kelley & Co., shipped on Saturday last two double-deck car loads of hogs from this station. Looks as if they were a sort of hogish set around here.

Frank Frink of Raisin Center, lost his best horse very suddenly a few days ago. Sorry for you, Frank. And that reminds us a gain of the old proverb, Blessed be nothing.

ONSTED ODDS.

Wilson Lee took a trip to Charlotte last Saturday evening, on business.

George Laur and B. L. Howes have gone to Oceana county.

S. D. Evans hobbles around on crutches. A sprained ankle is the cause.

Mrs. W. B. Knapp spent Thanksgiving at her daughters, in Tecumseh.

Ira Fish commenced school in district number nine, on Monday last.

Charles Hendryx and family, of Franklin, spent Saturday and Sunday at Jerome Snows.

Clarence and Etta Aten have returned from Napoleon. Clarence will go to Franklin to live this winter.

Robbie Glenn claims to be the champion mouse trapper of Onsted. He has caught three in a single night. Pretty good for a small boy.

William Parsons is putting up an addition to the building he recently purchased of Martin Taylor.

C. L. Greenleaf returned from Saginaw after an absence from home of eight days. Been evidently likes Southern Michigan the best.

Wilson Lee has got started in the boot and shoe business here. He says trade opens up good. He wants a good shoemaker, and will give the right kind of a man a good chance.

J. B. Daniels, who has been in Dakota for several years returned home last Friday. We have not heard whether he intends to remain in Michigan long or not. He says it was 22° below zero in Dakota before he left. Looks as if they might have some cold weather by-and-by.

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

We were in error last week in our clippings in what we said about the Thanksgiving services. I should have said services would be held in the Baptist church and as was the custom the Congregational minister was to have preached the thanksgiving sermon, but as the Congregational church here are now destitute of a Pastor Rev. Kerridge of the Methodist church preached the annual thanksgiving sermon. The sermon throughout was excellent and abounded in good plain practical common sense, and if all the sermon was personally applied the result undoubtedly would be that all would be made better, but it is too often the case that we think the preaching was for some one else. The feeling is that I am better than thou.

Our skating rink was well patronized on Thanksgiving afternoon and evening. Some nice skating, but the skating of our fellow citizen E. R. Smith caused more merriment than anything else. Mr. Smith fell but did not hurt himself much, but Oh my what a rent in his pants. He went home but the fun went on.

Mrs. E. R. Smith and daughter Blanche visited friends and relatives at Saline on Saturday and Sunday last.

The meeting of the Womans' Foreign Missionary society at the Methodist church on Sunday evening last was well attended and the exercises were instructive and entertaining throughout. There were several solos sung which were well rendered and especially the one sung by G. W. Goodrich and Rev. Kerridge. A liberal collection was taken up.

There will be preaching at the Congregational church next Sunday at the usual hour by the Rev. Mr. Banes who we are told the church have engaged to supply the pulpit the coming year.

We understand the donation for the Rev. Kerridge at the Methodist church was well attended. The supper was nice enough to suit an epicure and the donations were liberal and very generous and were thankfully received.

The High School Literary Society, which has become a healthy and vigorous child since the advent of Prof. Laflin, will give a "paidic" on Friday evening, Dec. 19th. A full program is in preparation and there will undoubtedly be a large turn out.

By contracting a severe cough and cold, I was compelled to give up my daily work and keep to the house. A neighbor recommended me to try a bottle of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup; it was procured and used; to my astonishment relief was instantaneous.
Edw. W. Clayton, Waverly, Md.

Morenci Observer: The proprietors of the new rink at Adrian seem to be getting things down fine, as they refuse to admit colored people. It is pretty late in the 19th century to thus draw the colored line in a northern city.

WASHINGTON MATTERS.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29, 1884.

EDITOR HERALD,—

When I left you, a few days after the recent election, I promised to write you a short letter from here.

Washington is very lively, and we may say it is "very full" of people from all parts of the country; being attracted here by various circumstances, as—the assembling of Congress, and the expectation that there will be many changes of the officials and employees; by the preparations for the dedication of the wonderful Washington Monument, now about completed, and to be finally dedicated with great demonstrations on the 22nd of Febuary next; and by the desire to be present at the inauguration of President Cleveland. It is thought by those who have long resided here, that there will be the greatest crowd and display ever witnessed on such an occasion for many years; though the President elect himself is opposed to any extra display; he is a man of true democratic simplicity and sound sense, having much more regard for the honor of the nation and the welfare of the people than for being lionized himself.

Almost every body that has buildings or rooms to spare, is preparing to entertain visitors to Washington on those two occasions. It is believed by many that there will not be less than half a million visitors in the city during the latter part of Febuary and the first week in March; and that they will leave an average of at least $10 each—some more, some less—making the snug sum of $5,000,000, which will be shared by our hotels, boarding houses, saloons and other business places. The railroad fare will be an average of about the same sum, so that they will be great gainers.

Putting up new buildings, together with enlarging and remodeling old ones, is a lively business just now in anticipation of the great numbers that will be here. Great arrangements for festivities and entertainments are also being made, more than has been noticed for several previous seasons.

There is some consternation among clerks and other employees, in fear that there will be a general change and clearing-out under the new administration, but the more faithful and reasonable have confidence in Cleveland's declared regard for the "Civil Service" law. But it is amusing to note how many clerks we see who declare that "they were in favor of Blaine and Logan, but always wished for Cleveland's election.

But there is a more genuine and well-grounded apprehension upon the part of arrogant and grasping monopolists and great railroad land grabbers, that the "time of good stealing and robbing" is about at an end, and the day of reckoning is not far off. And the high tariff champions have less encouragement than they desire.

I am glad to hear that the Second Mich. district has re-elected Col. Eldredge, because I well know that there was not a more faithful and attentive member than he proved to be, always in his seat, and ever ready to help his constituents in any proper way. Few members have made themselves better liked or secured more genuine respect, than your Representative. We want true, plain, honest democracy, and we have it in him.

In the last number of the HERALD I noticed what is said about the result, as figured up in its columns, on the afternoon of election. You know we looked the table over together, and acquiesced in the prediction that that table would be in accordance with the result; and I think it proves to be so without the exception of a single state.

We are having fine weather and have had an unusually pleasant autumn for farm and garden work in this region; we have had sufficent rain but no disastrous showers or floods, but the old weather-wise people tell us we will have more than the usual amount of snow the coming winter. Congress will convene very full next Monday, many members of both Houses being already here.

Cassell & Company, 739 & 741 Broadway, N. Y., may take credit to themselves for having issued the handsomest illustrated catalogue that has come from any American publishing house this or any year. It is a large quarto in size, thirty-two pages of extra fine calendered cut paper, with a blue paper cover enlivened by a dainty border, a picture in itself. Nearly every page of the catalogue has an illustration, and some of them more than one, all beautifully printed.—Every one who receives this catalogue, and it is sent on receipt of ten cents, will ask himself, "If the catalogue is so fine what must the books be?"

TECUMSEH, MICH., DEC. 4, 1884.

"A KISS FIRST!"

"What keeps Bessie so long at the well?"
Mother wonders, but can not tell.
Out by the well-curb Bessie stands;
The pitcher grasped by her chubby hands
Is empty still, while manly trace
Of anger vexes the childish face.
"If I were a boy, I wouldn't tease.
Leave me alone now, Bobby, please."

Up on the well-curb Bobby sits,
A roguish smile o'er his brown face flits.
"I ain't your kind of a boy, you see;
Give me the kiss and I'll let you be.
You're welcome to drain the old well dry,
But a kiss first, Bessie, so say I."
And Bobby is master of well and rope,
So how can Bessie for victory hope?

Slowly homeward little Bess goes,
Her soft cheeks blushing like any rose;
And Bob (the little vexed heart beats fast)—
But the pitcher is full to the brim at last.
There's a moss-grown well near by, and to-day
I heard a gray-haired woman say:
"What keeps Bessie so long at the well?"
Ah! I know, but I wouldn't tell.

For what if two by the well-curb stand,
Bobby and Bessie, hand in hand!
What if a pitcher forgotten lies
At the feet of both! and if two blue eyes
See only the glance of another pair,
And if there are saucy lips that dare
To ask for a kiss! What harm, pray tell,
If Bessie should linger at the well?

—M. D. Brine, in Harper's Weekly.

AT SIXTY-FIVE.

Major Weatherbeam's Proposal and Discomfiture.

Sixty-five is not very old. No, indeed.

If one is still straight, with a serviceable eye and a tolerable hearing, in addition to a well-filled pocket-book, why, what is sixty-five?

To count sixty-five distinct summers, and sixty-five mellow autumns, that drowse into peaceful winters and awaken in refreshing springs, is a great privilege. Think of the accumulation of ideas and experiences, of friends and memories. A rare age, surely, to be enjoyed in spite of rheumatic twinges.

Major Weatherbeam, buttoning his elegant fall overcoat about him as he strode down the avenue under the maples, was sure he would not give his ripe perfection for the callow and tasteless experience of the past. He smiled up at the bright foliage, and knocked the head off a straggling aster in his complacency. He found a dime for a little boy peeping, wide-eyed into a candy-shop, and stood still to watch the urchin as he bolted for the door, and nodded in good fellowship to a woman who watched with him amused. The Major's little terrier followed, for once, quite unrebuked, and turned with him up a broad macadamized street at the right. The firm stride traversed two blocks quickly, and paused before a brown stone mansion, with a pine-dotted lawn in front. One naturally puffs a little at the end of a long walk, whether one is sixty-five or not, and if by nature discreet, pauses awhile to regain the breath before venturing to call on ladies. Any tidy man will dust his clothes a little with his handkerchief, and twist his mustache a trifle when he wishes to look well. The Major presses the bell beside the stately door, and stands erect. A little pause follows, in which he listens to the wind running the gamut of elfin melody in those grouped pines; then the heavy doors unfold: a salute no younger man could imitate; an inquiry, and closed doors again, with the Major inside. The mansion is divided in quarters by two huge halls, and a wide fireplace gives forth a glorious radiation of heat and light over the statues and frescoed walls. The Major seats himself before the blaze, and counts the tiles and deciphers the inscriptions about the mantel. There is a rustle of silk skirts, and a tap of feet on the oak stairs. The Major rises, with a sudden rush of blood to the head—not apoplectic, surely—and salutes the red-draped figure through the interstices of the balustrade.

He handed the lady down the last steps and led her across the hall, while a green parrot hopped at her heels.

"Miss Margery"—his voice was like a violoncello—"It is not usual for a business-man like myself to call on a lady of an afternoon."

"Therefore, sir, is the honor all the greater;" poising one toe on the fender to aid her balance in the high-seated leather chair.

"Therefore is the need great, my dear young lady!"

"Oh! ha! ha! ha!" in musical staccato from the high-back chair. At sixty-five one is too dignified to like such a laugh in connection with one's self.

"Yes, Miss Wheatcroft, I felt I could not, in justice to you or myself, remain longer without confessing to you my attitude towards you.

"Oh, how kind of you," very sincerely. "I looked—I looked for you all day yesterday, sir"—a little hurriedly, with the red deepening about the dimples.

The Major's head gave an involuntary jerk. Girls were, once, more decorous. His deceased Julia Ann would never have shown such impulsiveness. Yet it must be confessed 'twas extremely flattering; and then, good heaven, what eyes! The apoplectic symptoms returned.

"Miss Margery, how gracious of you to say so. I'm sure I never hoped—".

"Yes, and I was making all sorts of plans for us two. Poll, come down! Major, she's trying to pull your hair! Look out, sir: she'll scratch you! Here, give her to me! There, Miss Poll; you sit on my chair. You can't pull my hair, because I don't reach up high enough—ha! ha! ha—eh, Major?" her teeth gleaming out in the glow from the cedar fire. "Yes, I was thinking, you see, how proud I should be of you. You are so tall, and—now, don't mind, for I'm going to flatter you all the rest of your days—and so handsome! And how proud I hoped you would be of me!" (A half-rising attitude on the part of the Major, who is forgetting decorum, and how girls were forty years ago.)

"Oh, Major, you are finding the blaze too hot. How stupid of me to let you roast in that manner. Here, let me put up the screen. Isn't it a pretty one? I embroidered it myself. See, it represents an Italian princess under an ilex tree. I think she looks a trifle like your son, Ned, only, of course, he's not done in Kensington. Well, I was planning that once in awhile, on very grand occasions, you might take me out with you——"

"Once in a while, madam!" The Major was a vast substantial protest.

"Oh, I know, of course, what you think you have to say. But don't do it. Besides, we couldn't leave Ned behind very often." A lurking laugh in the corners of two brown eyes. "Or, he might go with Aunt Maria, eh? Oh—o—o—o!"

The Major couldn't see anything funny in that common-place arrangement.

"My dear Miss Margery"—(Confound those chairs! A man couldn't move them an inch without getting red in the face, they were so heavy.)—"you are surely determined to defraud me of my share of the conversation, though I can not tell you how relieved I am to find you prepared to receive my overtures. I confess there were moments when I feared you might be less fond of me on account of the disparity of our ages——"

"Why, goodness, it wouldn't seem half so lovely any other way! That's just the nicest part of it!" How that presumptuous firelight clambered up from her little feet to the dimples in her hands and the rosy folds about her neck; and, climbing still, stopped at her rosier lips! Her last sentence, and the fire-light stopping right there, where it did, made the Major gasp.

"This is one of the most delightful surprises of my life," he went on, when he could speak. "I want to tell you how fondly I shall cherish you; how earnestly I shall strive to gratify each wish that you can make; how truly proud I shall be of my beautiful young——"

"Oh, stop! You praise me more than I can ever deserve." Two limpid tears showed through the gathering gloom. "I never dared hope you would receive me so tenderly. I am a-coming right over there, sir—and right behind your chair—so—on my tip-toes, and—put one—little kiss—like that!—on your dear old forehead."

The Major grew more agile than he had been for twenty years. Meanwhile Poll had got to screaming "Lord! lord! lord! lord!" and would not leave off.

"Oh, yes, I'm so thankful you like me! And we'll all be so happy together, won't we? And we both are grateful, I assure you. Here's the ring he gave me. See! Two beautiful pearls, and that twinkling diamond. Doesn't it look charming in the firelight? Ned said—don't think me silly for telling you—that if you were satisfied with the little wife he had chosen he believed he would go half mad with joy. But really I didn't think he'd tell you so soon, for he felt a little timid about it." A long pause, during which the Major relaxes his fatherly embrace somewhat. Then a venture from the girl: "I'm afraid I've talked too freely with you! Or perhaps you feel sad when you remember Ned is going to belong to me?" The head bows so low that the light climbs to that now. "But we'll live somewhere near you and see you every day. Why, must you be going? Can't you stay to tea? Well, button up your coat well. Now, please give your new child one more kiss to tell her that you mean all you have said. Good-bye! Good-bye!"

"Lord! lord! lord! lord! lord!"

How that bird screams. The wind has risen very fast, and the pines strike at each other angrily. There is a promise of a dismal rain, and the dusk hides all of the autumn's beauty and leaves only its leaflessness apparent.

Sixty-five, sixty-five! At that age it is hard climbing a hill in the teeth of the wind!—Elia W. Peattie, in Current.

REAL CIVIL-SERVICE REFORM.

How Old Wormwood Goodboy Applied the Rules to His Son, Leonidas.

By the way, you remember young Leonidas Goodboy? Old Wormwood Goodboy's son, nice chap; smart, and well behaved as a rule. He went away to college only last month and came back home last week for ten days' visit. He said it was the "short vacation." Old Wormwood had never been to college in his life, but he surmised that something was short beside the vacation. So one day, after Leonidas had called his mother "Dame" once or twice, and addressed his father as "Governor" and "Gov.," called his sister "gummy," and slapped his little brother, the old man took him away into an exceeding dark and lonesome woodshed, and while he stood there, cutting the buckle off a skate strap in an awfully solemn way, he told Leonidas that since he went away in December, there had been a popular revolution in the house; that the people had successfully inaugurated a through civil-service reform; that it was just a little the thoroughest and civiliest h had ever seen; that the rules of the service were most rigidly and most civily enforced, and that Section 1, Article 1, was that the oldest man in the house was boss; and Section 2, same article, was that sass is sass, whether it came from a tramp, a hired girl, or a college President: that—

"Take off your coat, Leonidas, my son," said old Wormwood; and then and there made a practical application of the rules of the civil service with a directness that showed that his right arm had not forgot its cunning, and that skate strap clove to the roof of Leonidas' scholarly back like cleavs of the forest for number. The applicant was declared admitted, under the rules, and he goes back to college to-morrow, a civilly-reformed boy. He? oh, bless you, no, he doesn't want to go back, but he has to, under the rules, and he doesn't kick. Old Wormwood is going with him.—R. J. Burdette, in Brooklyn Eagle.

—Said an old Colorado miner a short time ago: "They ain't turning out no millionaires in Colorado these days. The crop of bonanza kings is played out. Don't make no mistake. Things have changed mightily out our way. The smart fellows who raked in big stakes in the mines quit the country or went into some more substantial business. The unfortunate devils who thought they had picked up enough to last them forever soon went broke.—Denver Tribune.

Value of Knowing How to Graft.

Every farmer's boy should learn to graft. Few occupations give more pleasure or a greater reward. To convert a wild and thorny fruit into one bearing large and delicious fruit is a wonderful and fascinating process. Grafting need not be confined to fruit trees. Ornamental trees and shrubs which are nearly related to each other may be grafted. Several kinds of roses may be grown on the same bush, and differently colored lilacs may be mixed on the same stalk. Grafting is an easy art to acquire. Simply making the cions live is but a part of the operation on fruit trees, however. One must plan for the future top of the tree. He must graft such limbs as should make permanent factors in the top he is building; and while he should avoid grafting too many limbs, he should likewise avoid grafting too few. In either extreme too much cutting for the good of the tree will have to be done. If too few limbs are grafted it will be necessary to cut too many branches off entirely during the process of grafting. If too many limbs are grafted it will be necessary to cut many of them out in a few years to prevent crowding. It must be remembered that a grafted branch will occupy more room than a natural branch, for the cions branch and bush out from the points of their insertion. How many limbs and which ones to graft must be learned by experience and judgment.

The kind of grafting most likely to be practised on the farms is that known as cleft grafting. The process is a simple one. Saw off a limb to be grafted where it is an inch or less in diameter, trim the edges of the "stub" smooth, and split it with a large knife or a cleaver made for the purpose. The cleft should not be more than four inches deep at the most. A wedge is now inserted in the center of the cleft, and a cion is set on each side of the stub. The cions are made of twigs of last year's growth. They should be cut before the trees show any signs of starting in the spring. When the cion is prepared ready for setting it should contain about three buds. The lower end is cut wedge-shaped by slicing off each side of the cion. On one side of this wedge-shaped portion, and midway between its top and bottom, should be left one of the buds.

When the cion is set the bud will be deep down in the side of the cleft in the stub and will be covered with wax, but, being nearer the source of nourishment, will be the most apt of any buds to grow, and it will readily push through the wax. The cion is set into the cleft by exercising great care that the inner surface of the bark on the cion exactly matches the inner surface of the bark on the stub. A line between the bark and the wood may be observed. This line on the cion, in other words, should match this line on the stub. Wax the whole over carefully and thoroughly. Do not leave any crack exposed. Wax which is pretty hard and which must be worked and applied with the hands is commonly best. We have given several good recipes for grafting wax. We would recommend that grafting be not confined to the orchard. Experiment: Try pears or apples on wild crabs and thorns. One must not look for success on trees much different from the cions, but there is room for experimenting and more light is needed.—American Cultivator.

The Honey Crop.

The honey crop of the present year is not up to the standard either in quantity or quality. In some localities the so-called "honey-dew" has been so abundant as even to kill the leaves of the trees where it was deposited, and, of course, the bees gathered it in large quantities, and deposited it in the hives, but it is unworthy of the name of honey, not being of the nature of that article at all.

But now comes a worse trouble, and it is of a two-fold nature—we refer to the uses to which this so-called "honey-dew" secretion is put, when gathered by the bees. To sell it for honey will be as damaging to the sale of pure honey as to put glucose upon the market and sell it for honey, and it should not be done under any circumstances. A one-pound section well-filled with this stuff was placed on our desk a few days ago, with the question, "What is it?" It neither has the smell or taste of honey, and is the poorest kind of a substitute for it. To all, then, the Bee Journal would say: "Do not undertake to sell it for honey; no matter what the amount may be which the bees have deposited in their surplus honey sections."

The other point of the "caution" which we would give, is this: If the fall crop of honey should be a poor one, the bees may have nothing upon which to subsist during the coming winter, except this secretion of the aphides, misnamed honey-dew, and the result of such a state of affairs may be very detrimental—spreading disease and death all around.

Should there be a bountiful honey crop this fall, it will be indeed "a God-send" to the poor bees—saving the lives of millions. Let us hope that it may be so, especially as the basswood has failed in many places, and the early havest has been, generally, but a very slight one.

In case the fall-harvest is also a failure, there should be a close inspection of the contents of the hives, a general cleaning-out of the aphidæ secretion by the use of the extractor, and a systematic feeding of the bees with sugar-syrup, or good honey, for winter stores.

We give this word of warning thus early, so that no one may have an excuse for neglecting the matter until it is too late and thus entail a severe loss of bees during the next winter.—Bee Journal.

—Stewed Beets. Boil them first the usual way, then scrape and slice them, put them into a stew-pan with a piece of butter rolled in flour, some boiled onion and parsley chopped fine, and a little vinegar, salt and pepper. Set the pan over a hot fire, and let the beets stew for a quarter of an hour.—Boston Budget.

—The high prices paid in the New York market for snapping and mud turtles has induced many farmers in Rockland and Orange Counties to go into the raising of these animals as a legitimate trade.—N. Y. Herald.

Danger from Catarrh

That exceedingly disagreeable and very prevalent disease, catarrh, is caused by scrofulous taint in the blood. Hood's Sarsaparilla, by its powerful purifying and vitalizing action upon the blood, speedily removes the cause, and thus effects a radical and permanent cure of catarrh. Those who suffer from its varied symptoms—uncomfortable flow from the nose, offensive breath, ringing and bursting noises in the ears, swelling of the soft parts of the throat, nervous prostration, etc.—should take Hood's Sarsaparilla and be cured.

The Best Medicine

"I have suffered with catarrh in my head for years, and paid out hundreds of dollars for medicines, but have heretofore received only temporary relief. I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla and now my catarrh is nearly cured, the weakness of my body is all gone, my appetite is good—in fact, I feel like another person. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best medicine I have ever taken." MRS. A. CUNNINGHAM, Providence, R. I.

Serious consequences are liable to ensue if catarrh is not attended to in season. The disease frequently destroys the sense of smell and often developes into bronchitis or pulmonary consumption. Undoubtedly many cases of consumption originate in catarrh. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures catarrh and has even effected remarkable cures of consumption itself, in its early stages. A book containing statements of many cures by Hood's Sarsaparilla, will be sent free to all who send address to C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Catarrh and Impure Blood

"Hood's Sarsaparilla has helped me more for catarrh and impure blood than anything else I ever used." A. BALL, Syracuse, N. Y.

"I suffered three years with catarrh, and my general health was poor in consequence. When I took Hood's Sarsaparilla I found I had the right remedy. The catarrh is yielding, as Hood's Sarsaparilla is cleansing my blood, and the general tone of my system is improving." FRANK WASHBURN, Rochester, N. Y.

—A new zoological curiosity in Baltimore is an Australian fish called the goby. It is said to climb or jump out of its aquarium and to crawl with great ease for several hours upon terra firma.

—Thomas Jefferson's tomb, on which the United States Government recently spent $10,000, suffers again at the hands of relic hunters. The breaking of the lock and the defacing of the railing of the inclosure, as well as the chipping of the tomb, are mentioned in a Charlottesville paper.—Washington Post.

—Men of science do not hold the popular view that there has been a sufficiency of Arctic exploration. It does not matter whether we go a few miles further north or not, but it is important to obtain exact knowledge about the winds, tides and other physical phenomena of the Northern Hemisphere.—Chicago Herald.

—By the roadside near Clyde, N. Y., is a stone five feet long, two and a half feet wide, and sunk deep in the earth. On its surface a concavity or basin has been cut out. It is said to have been used by the Indians two hundred years ago for pulverizing corn. A gentleman of Clyde has a stone pestle used in pounding the kernels.—Buffalo Express.

—According to California law a man is a vagrant, no matter what his income, if he consorts with criminals and spends his time in idleness. Alfred Migueron, whose income is $240 monthly, was lately committed as a vagrant for a hearing at a higher court, and $500 bail, which he was willing to put up, was refused.—San Francisco Call.

—The Mechanical World, of London, says that the United States has the best machinery and tools in the world; and M. Lourdelot, who was recently sent over here by the French Minister of Commerce, says that the superiority of tools used here and the attention to details too often neglected in Europe are elements of danger to European industries.

—Wild animals are very cheap in London just now, and persons desiring to purchase have an excellent opportunity to get them at a low figure. One German dealer has twenty-seven elephants on hand. Tigers have fallen from £200 to £80; a two-horned rhinoceros bought by the Zoological Gardens twelve years ago for £1,250 could now be had for £100; bears can be had for a gift, and lions are open to offers.

—A few days ago as some boys were passing a piece of woods at Pierceville, Madison County, N. Y., they found an old blue shawl in a decaying stump. Within the shreds were wrapped five pocket-books, two jack-knives, half a dozen coarse combs, and a dozen fine combs, the last with date of manufacture, 1851, stamped on each. Probably the proceeds of some long ago burglary. All showed the marks of many years' decay.—Buffalo Express.

A Healthy, Beautiful Woman.

Here is a paragraph descriptive of Theodosia and her wholesomeness. Theodosia makes her appearance of a morning:

"Perhaps there is no better test of a woman's health and beauty than her appearance when she presents herself at an early breakfast. She is then more as nature made her than at any other period of the day, when art has been brought in with a view of heightening her charms. If she has slept well, it argues to some extent a sound nervous system, and the effect is seen in the brightness of her eyes and the tone possessed by the muscles of the face and neck. * * * Her intelligence is then at its maximum, and she feels the mental recklessness that is so generally the result of sound, healthy sleep, and that is only a natural elation of the emotions, pleasant, doubtless, for her to exhibit, but far more pleasant to those to whom it is manifested."

The unhealthy woman at breakfast Dr. Hammond dismisses as follows: "Her expression is indicative of the discomforts she has undergone during the night, her movements are either painfully slow or aggravatingly brusque, her intellect shows stupidity, her emotions are torpid, her perceptions dull. * * * There is no better test of a woman's health than her ability to eat a hearty breakfast, and it migt almost be said that her physical beauty is in direct proportions to the amount of beefsteak or mutton chops she can put into herself at this meal. Certainly, pretty women can always eat a hearty breakfast." There can be no doubt but that Dr. Hammond is an expert.—N. Y. Times' Review of Dr. Hammond's "Lal."

The American Pine Supply.

In the United States the problem that has long agitated Europe has begun to present itself, and the question, "From whence are the American people to procure their future supply of construction timber?" is constantly being asked by the dealers of this Republic. The question may readily be answered. The tall mountain ranges of Mexico are covered nearly to their summits with a growth of excellent white and pitch pine. The tops of the innumerable foot hills are also garnished with grand pine forests.

The same may also be said of the five Central American republics. As the traveler recedes from the coast, at about fifty miles from the ocean, the lands which gradually slope upward present an almost temperate flora to the eyes of the astonished beholder, while many pleasing contrasts may be observed; for instance, the larch, poplar and sycamore flourish, beside the tamarind and the frondose ceiba. The oak and the laurel mingle their branches with those of the nispero and the zapote, while the same fertile soil gives life to the cypress and the cherry, the apple and the bananna, the plum and the coffee trees. At an altitude of 2,500 feet above the sea the pine and other coniferæ first appeared, at an elevation of 6,000 this genus attains its greatest size, but at the height of 8,000 it assumes a stunted and dwarfed appearance.—N. O. Times-Democrat.

No one can be ill if the blood is pure. Yellow Dock and Sarsararilla root have long been recognized by physicians as blood purifiers. Don't be humbugged by the advertisements of the many quack bitters, but occasionally use Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla, and you will live to a good old age free from all distress of mind and body. Many of our best citizens who long suffered from bad blood indicated by weak kidneys, indigestion, sores, aches, etc., owe their recovery to the use of this remedy.

The American Agriculturist for December, 1884, rounds out the year with most supurb illustrations, and a very inviting table of contents. The cover is one of great beauty, while numerous full-page and other illustrations to the number of ninety, by Bennett, Forbes, Folsom, and other well known artists, add to the attractiveness of the number. Joseph Harris tells what he saw on a long Western tour, from which he has just returned.

Many who long suffered from indescribable feelings of distress, lame back aching joints, sores, swellings, weakness of the uniary and digestive organs, unnatural feelings of weariness, headache, nervousness, despondency, sleepishness, disturbing dreams, partial insanity, etc., after doctoring liver kidneys, nerves and brain, with the various quack nostrums of the day, and being nearly frightened to death by their alarming advertisements, quietly began using Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla, and were agreeably surprised to quickly find themselves restored to perfect health. No other remedy equals it.

"Nature's Serial Story" is concluded by Rev. E. P. Roe in the coming Christmas issue of HARPER'S MAGAZINE, with a pleasant Christmas episode which readers will have more than suspected. In this story Gibson and Dielman have co-operated to make it the most richly illustrated work of fiction ever issued, and the former has given a careful as well as picturesque series of portraitures of the varying seasons of the American year. The story will also make a superb holiday volume from the press of Harper & Brothers, in which Mr. Gibson will add a few decorative illustrations not given in the magazine.

Don't make the mistake of doctoring liver and kidneys to cure consumption. If you will lay all other remedies aside and put your trust in D. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, it will surely benefit you. Try it for coughs and colds, and see what an excellent remedy it is.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly

The December number, closing the eighteenth volume, fully maintains the meritorious character of this magazine, and will doubtless secure a large subscription for the next volumes. The publication is remarkable for its comprehensiveness and cheapness. Among the prominent illustrated articles are "The Dramatists of To-day," "A Ramble Through the Island of Jersey," "Forms of Salutation," "The Great Elector of Brandenburg," "The Great Schools of Merrie England," etc. etc., written by popular authors. The interesting serial, "The Death-Mark," is continued, and there are several short stories, sketches, adventures and poems, furnishing very pleasant reading. There are also an abundance of short articles, paragraphs, anecdotes etc.—indeed the 128 quarto pages present literature of a high order, and the embellishments besides a handsome colored plate frontispiece, "Flirtation." The price is only 25 cents a number or $2.50 a year, postpaid. Mrs. Frank Leslie, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, N. Y.

It costs not less than $33,000,000 annually to support the dogs of the United States.

Nothing Make in Vain,

We are told that nothing was made in vain; but what can be said of the fashionable girl of the period? Isn't she maiden vain? Hood's Sarsaparilla is made in Lowell, Mass., where there are more bottles of it sold than of any other sarsaparilla or blood purifier. And it is never taken in vain. It purifies the blood, strengthens the system, and gives new life and vigor to the entire body. 100 doses $1.

GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS are the great blood purifier, liver and kidney remedy and life giving principle, a perfect renovator and invigorator of the system carrying away all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition, enriching it, refreshing and invigorating both mind and body. They are easy of administration, prompt in their action, certain in their results, safe and reliable in all forms of disease. Every moment of our lives, every part of our bodies, is wearing out and is being built up anew. This work is accomplished by the blood. The blood if pure makes the entire circuit of the body every seven minutes. But if it becomes weak or vitiated and does not perform its work properly the system is actually poisoned by the worn-out matter clogging the vital organs instead of leaving the body. Cleanse the blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, sores, etc. Keep the liver in order, the blood pure, health of the system will follow. Take GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS and no others. Sold by Baker & Hall and C. A. Wright & Co.

TECUMSEH, MICH., DEC. 4, 1884

THE HERALD FOR 1885.

Ten years ago, on the 15th day of November last past, we purchased the TECUMSEH HERALD of C. M. Burlingame and took possession of the property the same day. Those ten years have witnessed great improvements. We have had our ups and downs, have seen periods of prosperity and seasons of adversity the same as other business men; but viewing the decade as a whole, we have abundant reason to feel satisfied with the present status of the business. The HERALD establishment to-day represents an actual cash investment more than eight times as large as the purchase price which we paid for the property: and we enter upon the eleventh year of our life in journalism with a firmer faith than ever in our ultimate success and a stronger determination to achieve it.

In announcing our plans for the new year, we shall indulge in no flourish of promises. The HERALD has made a record in the newspaper field. Its future can be judged in the light of the past. Our principal aim shall be to make the HERALD a good local family newspaper. General news, state news, and family reading will not be neglected, nor will editorial comment be eschewed. The HERALD is not, and never has been, a neutral paper. It has been, and will continue to be, an independent paper. We shall not shrink from expressing our honest opinions upon all subjects, whenever the occasion may seem to demand it.

Recognizing the tendency of the times towards reduced expenditure and economy in all things, we have arranged our subscription rates accordingly. The price of one copy for one year will remain the same as heretofore. New subscribers handing in their names at once will receive the paper for the present month of December free. All who pay one year in advance at full rates will receive as a premium a fine lithograph portrait of Grover Cleveland, 21x28 inches in size, the retail price of which is $1.00. People who prefer a cash reduction can be accommodated by clubbing with other papers. Our club schedule contains nearly all the papers and periodicals which are generally taken in this vicinity. Nearly every farmer in Northern Lenawee takes from three to six newspapers, and many receive a dozen. Selections can be made from the following list, and by taking several papers at once, a liberal discount will be given from regular rates.

Sample copies, to any address, free.

Old subscribers will be entitled to all the privileges granted new ones, by settling arrearages to Jan. 1, 1885, and paying one year in advance.

TEMPERANCE DEPARTMENT.

EDITED BY A COMMITTEE OF THE UNION PROHIBITION PARTY.

Motto: No license for the Liquor Traffic in any form or for any price.

ALARMED.

The Champion, organ of the beer, wine and spirit trade of the northwest, is evidently badly scared. The following two editorials appeared in that journal last week. We give them to our readers and invite a careful perusal of them.

WARNING TO THE LIQUOR DEALERS.

Although the complete returns of the election are not yet at hand, enough we know that in every state the union the Prohibition candidates have received thousands of votes, and with one or two exceptions the gain, being made the more so by the frenzy St. John throws into the stands the self styled workingman's and people's candidate, the irrepressible Benjamin F. Butler. It reaches a total of over 200,000 votes. A similar strength of the Prohibition element was developed by the votes cast for congressional, state executive, and legislative candidates. What of it? Much is that to the liquor trade? It is exactly what the firing of the first cannon of Fort Sumpter, on the 12th April, 1861, was to the United States government: a solemn, forcible, defiant declaration of war, by the simultaneous opening of hostilities. There is no backing out now for either side. The Prohibitionists have shown at this election that they now are enlisted for the war to its bitter end. They propose to crush the liquor traffic out of existence, by fair means or foul, and they have good reason for being sanguine of success. Look at their sweeping victories in Kansas and Iowa, at their progress in Missouri, Georgia, Tennessee, Kentucky and Illinois, where local option and high license prevail, and at their steadily growing strength in a dozen other states, such as Indiana, Ohio, Wisconsin, Michigan, Minnesota and others. Are you blind? Are you deaf? Are you the fools of whom the Latin Poet said: Quen Deus perdere volait, prius dementat. Whom God wants to punish, he first makes mad, crazy. It would seem so indeed.

The Prohibition flood is now spreading over every state in the union, threatening some of them, ruining others. It undermines the very foundations of every distillery and brewery and shakes like an earthquake every liquor warehouse and every saloon in the land. Do you not hear and feel the Prohibition waves beating against the very walls of your stores, your business places, your family dwellings?

When the Ohio or the Missouri rivers rise and overflow their banks and cover the lands on both sides with debris and ruins, do the riparian inhabitants stand stupidly by to witness the falling down of their houses, barns and stables, the carrying off by the flood of their hens, cattle and grain? Do they smile, stick their hands in their breeches pockets and say to one another: "Well, if my neighbor can stand it I can."

Yet this is exactly the condition of the liquor dealers and saloonkeepers of almost every state in the union today—this is exactly how they act, how they speak. They can't help seeing the wave of Prohibition rolling onto them, they can't help foreseeing the destruction and ruin which will follow, and yet: They quietly look on with their hands in their pockets, a cigar or pipe between their lips, placidly saying, "Well, all we can do won't help us any. What's the use throwing our money away for protective associations. If others can stand it, I can." And the like.

Once more we call your attention to your danger. There was mirth rejoicing, carousing and revelry in the dinning hall of the Babylonian Monarch Belshazzar where the mysterious hand traced on the wall in fiery characters the ominous words, "Mene, Tekel, Upharsin." Neither the king nor his guests took notice of the warning, before moving they were slaughtered, the royal palace plundered and given a prey to the flames, and the Babylonian or Assyrian empire obliterated from the face of the earth.

Saloonkeepers, liquor dealers, brewers, distillers, beware! The muster of the Prohibition hosts, at the late election is your "Mene, Tekel, Upharsin." Rouse yourselves from your lethargy; form your protective phalanxes, fight for your rights, for your business, for your homes; but remember that while a child can easily break a single twig or a small stick, the most powerful men cannot break a bunch of rods tied together. In Union there is Strength. United we stand, Divided we fall.

THE ENDURING ISSUE.

The election is over, and the smoke of the battle is disappearing; and as the atmosphere clears up, we can see standing forth in glaring prominence one representative and distinctive fact, which it becomes the friends of Personal Liberty to heed and keep prominently in mind. This fact is that there is a national Prohibition party organized in this country, which is bent upon carrying forward the temperance agitation to the bitter end. The party which voted for St. John for president "means business." It is enlisted for war, and the fluctuations of presidential campaigns are mere subsidiary incidents in its grand crusade. It has enlisted in its behalf several great religious organizations, with their Sunday schools and their attendant swarm of fanatics, and while the more conservative of these organizations stand firm against the inroads of frenzied agitation and zeal, the fanatical churches with their powerful discipline constitute a great political power. Outside of the democratic and republican parties, and to a certain extent independent of either, this party looms up like a cloud in the horizon of Personal Liberty.

We counsel our friends to stand firm in the future with faith in this great people ever ready to do justice; with faith in our form of government, and our constitutions, statues, and courts. Standing thus firm, and prepared to do all that becomes good citizens to defend and maintain our rights we shall not fail. But, while you "trust in God, KEEP YOUR POWDER DRY."—THE LEVER.

Although many changes have taken place since he left, he finds lots of old acquaintances yet.

We regret to lose Mr. Wolcott from our business circles, but feel assured that the new partner will worthily fill his place.

Money to be Made.

It is said that dull times are not known by the agents for the great publishing house of George Stinson & Co., of Portland, Maine. The reason of this exceptional success is found in the fact that they always give the public that which is keenly appreciated and at prices that all can afford. At present we understand, their agents are doing wonderfully well on several new lines. They need many more agents in all parts of the country. Those who need profitable work should apply at once. Women do as well as men. Experience is not necessary, for Messrs. Stinson & Co. undertake to show all who are willing to work, not hard but earnestly, the path to large success. It should be remembered that an agent can do a handsome business without being away from home over night. Another advantage—it costs nothing to give the business a trial, and an agent can devote all his time or only his spare moments to it. Stinson & Co. guarantee grand success to all who engage and follow simple and plain directions that they give. We have not space to explain all here, but full particulars will be sent free to those who address the firm; their full address is given above.

Give us the news. Yes, it is the news and local happenings that we want. Sometimes events of a personal nature occur in the families of our subscribers and others that they would like to have us mention and which we would be glad to notice, but they fail to report and we do not hear of them, and there is disappointment. So we say to all, don't be backward about giving us the news. We are all the time watching for events, but it is impossible to catch everything that flies. If mention is not made it is because it is impossible for newspaper men to be everywhere at once.

EDITOR OF HERALD.—

Where do you buy your thermometers? In your weather item last week you note a change of fifty degrees in twenty-four hours. My thermometer showed a change of only forty-four degrees in the same time.
RAISIN FARMER.

Our item, as originally written, claimed a change of forty-four degrees between Sunday morning and Monday morning. After writing it, we observed an article in the Adrian Record which claimed a change of fifty degrees in the same twenty-four hours, and in reading the proof we changed our figures to correspond. We didn't propose to be scooped on a weather item by a two cent daily of a neighboring town. Not much.

Thanksgiving is a day for rejoicing. We were usually happy on that day, and yet the shadow of disappointment clouded our happiness. We accepted an invitation to turkey and chicken pot pie at the Stacy mansion, and after accepting it, received a kind invite from Capt. Foster to partake of soup, fish and fowl at the Lilley House on that day. The dinners were at the same hour and it was impossible to attend both. If there is ever a time when an editor desires the gift of ubiquity it is on thanksgiving day. We understand that Capt. Foster gave a royal entertainment. He had sixty-one guests from the village, besides a large number of transients. Ninety three persons were fed and several baskets full were gathered up t the close of the feast.

B. J. Coller's holiday music trade opens up big. He sold two grand upright pianos and six organs within the past five days and received several orders for Christmas. The pianos were sold to Joseph Libbs, Railroad street; and T. W. Vandeburg, Comstock street. Organs to Joseph Stockwell, Dover; Clinton literary society; Chas. Terry, Morenci; Mrs. Grames, Deerfield; J. W. Dawson, Canandaigua; St Joseph church. The pianos and organs he represents are Chickering, Sohmor, Haines Bros., and Christie & Son, pianos. Estey, Clough & Warren and Cottage organs. Come early and select, as I have just received a lot of new styles.

Special prices will be given to the people of Tecumseh and vicinity during the holidays. I am going to stay in the business, and parties buying of me will have their instruments and machines looked after as heretofore. B. J. COLLER, Adrian.

During a short visit at Adrian the other day we called to see Fred Clark, the popular manager of the Central Hotel. Fred was feeling happy as usual. He has a good patronage both local and transient, and the "Central" under his management is gaining the reputation of being one of the best hotels in the state.

Rev. Wm. Mellen for 24 years a missionary among the Zulus of South Africa will deliver an address in the Presbyterian church next Sunday night. His subject will be, Africa open to civilization and christianity. He will exhibit a large map and trace on it the routes of recent explorers, including Livingston and Stanley, and will speak of the people and their customs. Mr. Mellen's lecture is said by those who have heard it to be entertaining and instructive. A collection will be taken. He will address the Young Ladies' Missionary Society on Sunday afternoon at three o'clock in the Lecture room.

Last Friday Michael Hammill Jr., went into Adamson's and priced a silver watch, stating that he wanted to buy one. George gave him the price at $7.00. While Hammill was examining the watch, Geo. was called to the back part of the store and Hammill then vamoused with the watch. He went directly up Chicago street and hid the watch under the culvert at the corner of Chicago and Pearl streets. Adamson soon discovered that the watch had been taken, went out on the street and found Hammill, who said he had concluded not to buy the watch, and had left it on the show case when he left the store. Adamson had him arrested and he gave bail for his appearance to-day. The officers searched him but no watch was found on his person. About three minutes after Hammill left Adamson's store, little Burt Grey was walking down Chicago street and saw a strange man stoop down and apparently put some article under the culvert near the old foundry. When the stranger had gone, he concluded to investigate, and there found the silver watch, which, in due time was returned to the rightful owner. Adamson has his watch and Hammill is under arrest.

THE THANKSGIVING FAIR.

The Annual Fair given by the Ladies of St. Peter's church on Thanksgiving day and evening was a decided success. The fair in the afternoon was well attended and a large quantity of fancy articles was disposed of. The evening entertainment was greeted with a full house. The program was one of much merit and it was very finely rendered. The tableaux were good and the vocal music by Mrs. Bidwell and Miss Grace DeWolf was excellent, of course. The operetta "Laila" has never been presented here before. The three leading characters of Laila, the Beggar Mother and the Fairy Queen were handsomely carried by Misses Mollie Keip, Mabel Hayden and May Woodward, who were assisted by a chorus of thirty young girls representing fairies and mountain children. Miss Jennie Root presided at the piano, Harry Root assisting with the flute in some parts of the play. It is needless to say that Miss Root carried her part to perfection, and to her managememt much of the success of the play can be attributed. A May pole dance at the close made a very pretty finale to the programme. The audience were well pleased with the entire entertainment, and were gratified to know that the financial returns repaid the ladies for their work.

LIBRARY LECTURE COURSE.

The first entertainment of the course to be presented by the Library Association this winter, will be given next Saturday evening by the Redpath Concert Company. This company is one of the very best musical combinations now traveling. It consists of Miss Ella M. Chamberlin, whistling soloist; Miss Edith Christie, violin; Miss Helen M. Howland, soprano; Frank G. Reynolds, humorist; Chas. T. Dennee, pianist. The committee are still short on the number of season tickets sold, and it is hoped that a large number of tickets will be disposed of before next Saturday evening. If any persons who wish to procure season tickets have been overlooked by the committee, they will find them for sale at Adamson's Jewelry store. Among a large number of flattering press notices of the Redpath Company, we cull the following:

The success of the Redpath Concert may be juged from the fact that every piece on the programme, with one exception, was enthusiastically encored and some of them twice. Burlington (Vt.) Free Press.

The concert by the Redpath Concert Co. at the Opera House, Tuesday evening, was the most pleasing entertainment that has visited Canandaigua for many a day. It was well that their printed programme contained only ten numbers, for every performance was so heartily encored that more than double the number was rendered. Canandaigua (N. Y.) Journal.

The Redpath Company was every thing they claimed for it and more, and those of our citizens who hold season tickets were more than compensated for the entire cost of the course by the pleasure afforded them at the entertainment. Washington C. H. (Ohio) Herald.

FARMERS' SOCIAL CLUB.

Friday evening, Nov. 28th, the Farmer's Social club met at the residence of Mr. R. B. Gillespie. There was the largest attendance of the season and all seemed to take a very lively interest in the welfare of the club. In fact it was a very enthusiastic meeting. The program was good and well carried out. Select reading by George Henderson, a good selection and well read. The instrumental and vocal music all fine and good selections. The essay by Mr. E. L. Russell was a review of the past of the club and a forecast of the future, and was well written and seemed to just fill the bill. A motion was made by Mr. Benedict that Mr. Russell furnish a copy of it for publication in the Tecumseh HERALD, which, upon a vote being taken, was unanimously adopted. At a former meeting of the club a vote was taken that at our annual meeting the club should reorganize by taking a new list of the members, and that each one upon signing his or her name should pay into the treasury, for running expenses, the sum of ten cents, (all under the age of sixteen exempt from payment.) There were 34 who signed their names and became members of the new organization. On motion a vote was taken that all the members of the old organization, not present, should be considered members of the new for one year at least. Motion prevailed. The Club being organized, proceeded to the election of Officers with the following result:

Pres.—I. H. Schreder.
Vice Pres.—George Griswold.
Sec. and Treas.—F. V. Horton.

Club adjourned for two weeks to meet at the residence of Mr. George Griswold, Dec. 12th, at 7 P. M., sharp.

Program for next meeting:

Music—Choir.
Dec.—Artie Hall.
Song—Mrs. Wm. Waldron.
Essay—Clara Waldron.
Song—Garland and Ara Gillespie.
Select Reading—Mrs. Geo. Griswold
Question—Resolved, That it would pay for farmers to keep farm accounts.
F. V. HORTON, Sec.

E. L. RUSSELL'S ESSAY.

Mr. President, members and friends of the Club:—When my name was called at our last meeting by the committee in connection with an essay, the thought forced itself upon me, that this was our annual meeting, and that I ought to bid farewell to the old year and welcome the new. That I should rehearse the events of the past and anticipate those of the future.

The passed season has been one very favorable to all. No destructive storms have swept over the land. No pestilence has visited us. No contagious diseases have been destructive to live stock. Pasturage has been nutritious and the flocks and herds are thriving. The earth has yielded up her increase in a remarkable degree. While the products of the soil have been abundant the farmer has had very seasonable weather for securing all classes of produce, and we have garnered food for a nation with plenty to spare.

In regard to the old year, as far as our Club is concerned, it has been a year of prosperity. There has been more sunshine than cloud. More joy than sorrow. More health than sickness. More pleasure than pain. Although the cares and labors of life may have rested heavily upon some still none have been reduced to want or suffering. In one instance a dark cloud has rested upon the home of one of the members that has caused real sorrow in the hearts at the home circle by depriving them of a kind husband and loving father, and cast a deep shadow over our club by depriving it of a worthy and beloved member.

But upon the whole the old year has brought much pleasure and enjoyment, and as we recall to mind each familiar face, each friendly greeting, and the many happy seasons, it is with regret we witness its departure and bid it a last farewell.

It is significant of a wholesome period in one's life, and that their lives have not been spent wholly in vain, when they can review past incidents with pride and pleasure, and feel that they have been seasons of not only happiness and enjoyment but of profit. Life becomes monotonous, and its duties burdensome when deprived of recreation and social enjoyment. The farmer in his isolated, condition, if deprived of society, becomes selfish and superstitious. Without food for his thoughts his mind is possessed of but few ideas, and he becomes an individual of prejudice and biased judgment. The heart without proper social culture becomes callous and indifferent to the welfare and happiness of others. In short, without recreation and social enjoyments, the individual, whether man, woman or child, exists but does not live, for the avenues through which pleasure, happiness and enjoyment, light, wisdom and knowledge enter the mind, are mostly closed. Then if mind influences mind, as matter influences matter; if thought develops thought as action develops muscle; if society and recreation are a necessity to human happiness; what can be more appropriate for an agricultural community than a well organized and conducted "Farmer's Social Club," where all, the old, the middle aged and the youth, the farmer, his wife and his children, can meet, and a welcome and a friendly greeting, with mental food and social enjoyment, and above all a wholesome moral atmosphere, more free from censure and evil influences than can be found elsewhere in the whole catalogue of social pastimes.

This we feel and realize has been the influence of the meetings of this Club upon its members. Three years ago we hardly knew our neighbors. We were embarrassed and restrained in each others presence. Some of us, although living in the same vicinity, following the same occupation, whose interests were one and the same, met as strangers. We knew not whether they possessed hearts or not. We entered not into sympathy with their feelings. We realized not that they had their hardships and trials as well as we. We knew not that they possessed bright thoughts, knowledge and information which might be of service to us. We realized only, that if they were prospered more than we were, we envied them.

To-night we meet here and greet each familiar countenance as that of a friend. Embarrassment and restraints have passed away. We fully realize that members have hearts capable of rejoicing with those who rejoice and weeping with those that weep. We have proved that we can learn much from each other how to better our condition as farmers—how to be more manly and womanly, how to be more generous in our thoughts and feelings, and if our neighbors are prosperous, we are taught to follow their example with the feeling and spirit that it can be done, and that if others can succeed in farming, we may also.

The literary and musical features have been entertaining to all, and interesting and profitable to the young. We cannot dispense with them. If more could be added of the same nature to attract and instruct the same class, it would harmonize very pleasantly with our feelings. The social part of itself pays for all efforts and sacrifices (with membership fees including.) The discussions have been profitable and carried on in a friendly spirit with a regard to instruction and improvement. Each year has brought renewed interest, and even if no new features are added, we welcome the new year with a great degree of hope and encouragement, and look for peace, prosperity and happiness in the future.

DEMOREST'S ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE for December contains not only a great deal of good Christmas literature, but many other well-written and interesting articles on various subjects. "Santiago," "An Old Port and Bit on Shore," "A Canterbury Pilgrimage," and "The Angelic Painter," will repay reading; and the household suggestions are eminently practical and useful. The illustrations are numerous, among which is a fine photogravure of the "Mater Dolorosa" of Dolci. For 1885, we are promised a serial by Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, and another by Mr. Charles Barnard, as well as many new and interesting features.

LIVES OF PAIN

RHEUMATISM and NEURALGIA have long enough run riot in the human system.

They have tormented the human family and defied the medical faculty from time out of memory; they have overrunnd the blood, demoralized the brain, racked the nerves, aconized the muscles and racked the frame with wearying pain.

"ATHLOPHOROS" is the enemy of Rheumatism and Neuralgia, repairs their damages, renews the blood, bases the joints, calms the nerves, soothes the muscles, gives rest and peace to the troubled brain, and ensures delightful sleep.

"ATHLOPHOROS" is a new remedy, but it has been abundantly tried. From far and near come testimonials from well-known persons who had been sufferers. It has turned their diseases out. It has cured them. That is all—and that is enough.

"ATHLOPHOROS" can do for you what it has done for those sufferers. It can drive out your Rheumatism and Neuralgia, and will do so if you give it a fair trial.

"ATHLOPHOROS" has by this time had such a good trial all over the country that its true worth is known, and its true character proved.

"ATHLOPHOROS" means "Prize-Bearer;" "Victor;" "Conqueror." It carries off the prize as victor over the attacks of these terrible maladies, and conqueror of the frightful agonies their victims have endured. Not a mere temporary relief, but a permanent, enduring, and triumphant cure.

If you cannot get ATHLOPHOROS of your druggist, [illegible] one dollar per bottle. We prefer that you buy it from your druggist, but if he hesitates to do so, be persuaded to try something else, but order at once from us as directed.

KING'S EVIL

Was the name formerly given to Scrofula because of a superstition that it could be cured by a king's touch. The world is wiser now, and knows that can only be cured by a thorough purification of the blood. If this is neglected, the disease perpetuates its taint through generation after generation. Among its earlier symptomatic developments are Eczema, Cutaneous Eruptions, Tumors, Boils, Carbuncles, Erysipelas, Purulent Ulcers, Nervous and Physical Collapse, etc. If allowed to continue, Rheumatism, Scrofulous Catarrh, Kidney and Liver Diseases, Tubercular Consumption, and various other dangerous or fatal maladies, are produced by it.

SCROFULA

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

Is the only powerful and always reliable blood-purifying medicine. It is so effectual an alterative that it eradicates from the system Hereditary Scrofula, and the kindred poisons of contagious diseases and mercury. At the same time it enriches and vitalizes the blood, restoring healthful action to the vital organs and rejuvenating the entire system. This great

Regenerative Medicine

Is composed of the genuine Honduras Sarsaparilla, with Yellow Dock, Stillingia, the Iodides of Potassium and Iron, and other ingredients of great potency, carefully and scientifically compounded. Its formula is generally known to the medical profession, and the best physicians constantly prescribe AYER'S SARSAPARILLA as an

Absolute Cure

For all diseases caused by the vitiation of the blood. It is concentrated to the highest practicable degree, and is by many other preparation for which like effects are claimed, and is therefore the cheapest, as well as the best blood purifying medicine, in the world.

NATIONAL BANKS.

One Hundred and Ninety-One Organized With Capital of $16,042,230 and $3,866,230 Circulation—The Comptroller of Currency Opposes Any Measure Looking to Inflation, and Suggests the Abolition of Tax on Circulation.

REPORT OF COMPTROLLER OF CURRENCY.

WASHINGTON, November 27.—Comptroller of the Currency Cannon, has just completed his annual report. That portion of it devoted to National bank statistics shows that during the year ended November 1, 1884, one hundred and ninety-one banks were organized with an aggregate capital of $16,042,230 and with $3,866,230 circulation. Since the establishment of the National banking system in 1863, there have been organized 3,964 National banks, and of this number 2,671 were in existence on November 1 last, the largest number that has been in operation at one time. The corporate existence of 90 banks expired during the year, of which 83 have been extended. The corporate existence of 154 banks will expire during November and December of this year, and 720 banks with an aggregate capital of $189,000,000 will expire during 1885. Eleven banks failed and were placed in the hands of receivers during the year.

The items of resources and liabilities tabulated in the report indicate that the business of National banks during the past eleven years has generally increased. The aggregate liabilities of National banks to depositors and correspondents were reduced during the year more than $94,000,000. This reduction of liabilities and general reduction of loans by banks—which amounted to more than $83,000,000 during the year—was doubtless caused, the Comptroller says, by the financial troubles of last May and the general depression of business.

Upon the general subjects of circulation and refunding, the Comptroller observes that upon the present basis of organization the banks in existence would require a minimum of $880,413,127 of United States bonds in order to continue as banking associations. The time of final payment of the debt is, however, the Comptroller says, yet distant, and with appropriate legislation there will probably be for many years no lack of bonds as a safe basis of circulation. Moreover, no feasible plan with other security has as yet been suggested affording a sound currency, redeemable on demand in specie, and he believes this extremely doubtful, whether after their experience for the past twenty years with the safe and convenient currency issued by the National banks, the people would be satisfied with a currency based on any security than United States bonds.

On November 1 there were $194,190,500 of three per cent. bonds payable at the pleasure of the Government. These bonds will probably be paid within the next two years, even if considerable changes are made in the tariff, and from 1887 to 1891, when the $250,000,000 of four and one-half per cents. mature, there will be no bonds which the Government can call in for redemption. No doubt the accumulation of surplus revenue, if it continues to accrue at the present rate during the four years between 1887 and 1891, together with the revenues of 1892, will be more than sufficient to pay off the four and one half per cents, and from 1892 to 1897 it will be impossible for the Government to use any of its surplus revenues for the payment of its bonds except at the option of their holders.

It is apparent that the Government cannot accumulate and hold its surplus revenues even during the short period from 1887 to 1892 without great disturbance to the business interests of the country. Much less can it do so during the longer period from 1892 to 1907. It appears, therefore, that the foregoing considerations should be given due weight in any plan for the funding of the four per cent. bonds maturing in 1907, and the Comptroller therefore suggests that the principle difficulties of the situation may perhaps be obviated as well as the reduction of interest effected by funding these bonds into others, which shall mature in proportionate amounts at certain fixed intervals. Thus the $738,000,000 of four per cents might be funded into an equal amount of three or two and a half per cent. bonds, one-fifth of which, or $147,600,000, to mature at intervals of five years, the first installment falling due July 1, 1887, and the remaining installments of $147,600,000 each on the first of July in the last year of each succeeding period of five years, viz.: 1902, 1907, 1912 and 1917. The average maturity of these five classes of bonds would be the same as that of the present four per cents, viz.: July 1, 1907.

Whatever course may be deemed expedient by Congress respecting the funding of future payments of the public debt the Comptroller thinks it perfectly safe and that it will afford great benefit to the public, to permit an issue by National banks of circulation to the extent of one hundred per cent. of the par value of bonds deposited, instead of ninety per cent. as at present. Even admitting that the bonds representing the public debt when funded at lower rates might at times be below par in the market the Government would, if forced to redeem the notes of insolvent banks always have the right to cancel the bonds on deposit securing the notes and thus extinguish an amount of its debt equal dollar for dollar to the notes redeemed.

Taxation on circulation, the Comptroller suggests, might be abolished and thus the profit on circulation may be increased to a point which will induce the banks to keep up their circulation to a maximum and stop the contraction now occurring. If this tax be abolished, all of the expenses incurred by the Government in keeping up the National banking system, should be paid by an assessment of the banks.

In concluding this subject the Comptroller wishes to have it distinctly understood that he is not in favor of any measure which will cause inflation. He is of the opinion that the present aggregate paper circulation, made up of legal tender and National bank notes, and of gold and silver certificates, is ample for all the needs of business.

He believes, however, that the sudden contraction of National bank circulation which, without appropriate legislation is imminent, will seriously embarrass the business of the country and that if this contraction is permitted to go on it may result in the entire discontinuance of the issue of notes by National banks. The Comptroller believes that this form of currency which can be increased or diminished in accordance with the natural laws which control business should be continued in preference to any other now permitted by law.

Georgi's Treason.

NEW YORK, November 27.—Count D'Esterhacy, of Hungary said, Tuesday relative to the Vienna dispatch reporting that General Georgi has been exonerated of treason by 280 of his former comrades: "I do not understand how Georgi can escape the charge that he betrayed his fellow revolutionists in 1848. I was present at the last council of war before the surrender. Georgi assumed all responsibility and would hear no advice. He ignobly saved his life and sacrificed thirteen of his Generals and hundreds of his officers. Until Louis Kossuth appends his signature to the document declaring that Georgi was not a traitor, his countrymen will refuse to believe in his innocence."

Downright Cruelty

To permit yourself and family to "Suffer!"
With sickness when it can be prevented and cured so easily
With Hop Bitters!!!

Having experienced a great deal of "Trouble" from indigestion, so much so that I came near losing my Life!
My trouble always came after eating any food,—
However light
And digestible,
For two or three hours at a time I had to go through the most
Excruciating pains,
"And the only way I ever got"
"Relief!"
Was by throwing up all my stomach contained. No one can conceive the pains that I had to go through, until
"At last"
I was taken
So that for three weeks I lay in bed and
Could eat nothing!
My sufferings were so that I called two doctors to give me something that would stop the pain; their Efforts were no good to me.
At last I heard a good deal
"About your Hop Bitters!
And determined to try them."
Got a bottle—in four hours I took the contents of
One!
Next day I was out of bed, and have not seen a
"Sick!"
Hour, from the same cause since.
I have recommended it to hundreds of others. You have no such.

FOUR POINTS Prepared by an entirely NEW METHOD. Composed of the PUREST MATERIALS. WILL NOT INJURE THE FABRIC. WILL CLEANSE WITHOUT RUBBING.

You can do a large washing without any rubbing, use the boiling process instead. You can save Time, Labor, Fuel, Soap and Clothing.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.

Cut up fine and dissolve one half bar in half gallon of hot water. Pour half this dissolved soap into a tub with just sufficient hot water to cover a boiler full of clothes. Then put the clothes in to soak, rubbing plenty of soap in the most soiled parts. Be sure that the soaking water is hot; soak the clothes half an hour, stir them occasionally so that they may get the full benefit of the hot suds; pour the remainder of the dissolved soap into the boiler, adding sufficient water to cover the clothes, wring them lightly out of the suds. Soap the stained spots and place loosely in the boiler; boil 15 to 20 minutes, rinse well, blue and hang to dry. Do not crowd the boiler too full. The sudsy boiling water may be used for further boiling by adding a little soap to each boiler-full of clothes. Flannels and prints should not be boiled, only a little rubbing required after soaking. This soap will cleanse clothing as thoroughly as any other without the use of the boiler. We prefer and recommend the boiling process as in itself a cleansing process, saving labor, the wear of the wash-board, and being the best disinfectent known, it is easier to boil the dirt out than to rub it out. You can cleanse perfectly the finest fabric without injury; the finest point lace and lace curtains. Soak point lace in hot suds made with this soap, press water out with the hand; boil 5 to 8 minutes in clean suds made with this soap, rinse thoroughly, press carefully between the folds of a towel, roll in a dry towel, and iron between pieces of old flannel. Soak curtains 10 to 20 minutes and boil 5 to 8 minutes, rinse, stretch on frame, or pin every scallop to carpet over a sheet to dry; no ironing required.

Be sure and ask for ELECTRIC-LIGHT SOAP; and take no other.

Sold by leading wholesale and retail grocers everywhere. Dealers may obtain our good upon application. ELECTRIC SOAP MANUFACTURING CO., Indianapolis, Ind., and 26-28 South Water St., Chicago, Ill.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE.

ILLUSTRATED.

With the new volume, beginning in December, Harper's Magazine will commence its thirty-fifth year. The oldest periodical of its type, it is not, in each new volume, a new magazine, not simply because it presents fresh subjects and new pictures, but also, and chiefly, because it steadily advances in the method itself of magazine making. In a word, the magazine becomes more and more the faithful mirror of current life and movement. Leading features in the attractive program for 1885 are: new serial novels by Constance Fenimore Woolson and W. D. Howells; a new novel entitled "At the Red Glove;" descriptive illustrated papers by E. D. Millet, R. Swain Gifford, E. A. Abbey, H. Gibson, and others; Goldsmith's "She Stoops to Conquer," illustrated by Abbey; important papers on Art, Science, etc.

BOTH HOUSES IN SESSION.

The Meeting of the Senate and House of Representatives—Floral Tributes on Members' Desks—Ready for Business.

WASHINGTON, December 1.—SENATE.—Twenty-seven Senators were in their places when the gavel fell at twelve o'clock. The Chaplain, in his opening prayer, alluded feelingly to the deaths of Senator Anthony, Secretary Folger and Representatives Evans and Duncan, and implored that in the new era that they were entering upon the only sectional rivalries might be in the paths of progress.

Senator Gorman's desk was banked up high with flowers. Two floral roosters of elaborate design towered high above his head, one bearing the inscription, "O! such a day! So fought, so followed and so fairly won; came not till now to decorate the times since Cæsar's fortune." Another floral design intimated that this particular desk "was reserved for A. P. G., 1887."

A third rooster of flowers decorated the desk of Senator Jonas. Senator Maxey had an immense "Lone Star"

Senator Lapham beamed from behind a huge horse-shoe of smilax, and the desks of the Vice President, of Senator Ingalls and others bore beautiful floral tributes. Senator Logan was early in his seat, and moved the final resolution to notify the House of Representatives, which Senator Sherman followed by a resolution to notify the President. The credentials of William H. Sheffield, as Senator-elect from Rhode Island in place of Senator Anthony, were ready but Mr. Sheffield was not present. The Senate took a recess until 12:40 to await the President's message.

Amongst the Senators conspicuously absent were Mahone and Riddleberger, of Virginia; Aldrich, Brown, Butler, Call, Camden, Colquitt, Fair, Farley, George, Gibson, Hampton, Jones of Nev.; Kenna, Lamar, Platt, Plumb, Slater, Williams.

Promptly at 12:40 the Senate was rapped to order. Routine business was proceeded with and at 12:45 a message was received announcing that the House was ready to proceed to business and had appointed a committee to wait upon the President. Senators Sherman and Garland were appointed a committee on behalf of the Senate for a like service.

On motion of Senator Ingalls, a resolution was adopted instructing the Committee on Public Lands to report such legislation as might be necessary to remove all fences illegally constructed on the public domain of the United States.

At 12:55 the Senate took a further recess of thirty minutes. At 1:35 p. m. the President's message was announced, and was read by Secretary McCook. Its reading occupied fifty minutes. On motion of Senator Aldrich the Senate at 2:55, as a mark of respect to the late Senator Anthony, adjourned.

HOUSE—As early as 10:30 the galleries began filling up and long before the hour of meeting every seat was filled and the standing room all taken. Crowds clustered around each doorway some distance into the corridor. Many of the desks of members as well as that of the Speaker, bore floral tributes in the shape of baskets, horseshoes, etc. Mr. Murphy, of Iowa, had an elaborate horseshoe bearing the word "Hennepin," as a compliment to his efforts in behalf of the Hennepin Canal enterprise. Mr. Cox, of New York, was complimented for his efforts in behalf of the life-saving service with a floral-ship with a bottle of wine on it. Messrs. Barbour, of Virginia; Mutchler, of Pennsylvania; McMillan, of Tennessee; Keifer, of Ohio; Cannon, of Illinois; Robinson, of Ohio; Valentine, of Nebraska, and Campbell, of Pennsylvania, were among the recipients of floral favors. At precisely twelve o'clock Speaker Carlisle called the House to order and prayer was offered by Chaplain Lindsey. The roll of members was then called by the Clerk.

Two hundred and seventy-two members responded to their names, being fifty-nine more than a quorum.

Mr. Holman presented the credentials of Benjamin T. Shively as successor to Mr. Caskins, of Indiana, and he was sworn in.

Mr. Randall, of Pennsylvania; Mr. Cox, of New York, and Mr. Brown, of Indiana, were appointed a committee to wait on the President and inform him the House was ready for business.

At 12:35 p. m. the committee having left, the House took a recess for fifteen minutes. At 1:40 p. m. the committee returned and were immediately followed by Mr. Pruden, the President's private Secretary, with the message. After the reading of the message and accompanying reports had been concluded, the House adjourned. Mr. Aiken, of South Carolina, will announce the death of his colleague, Mr. Evans and Mr. Ementrout, of Pennsylvania, the death of Mr. Duncan. Immediately after the reading of the President's message the House will adjourn as a mark of respect to their memory.

A Treacherous Chinese Convict.

JOLIET, Ill., December 1.—Ling Ap Dwe, the Chinese life convict sentenced from Chicago for murdering another Chinaman two years ago, attempted to kill his cellmate, Ah John, Saturday. Trouble has been brewing between the two for several weeks. Ling Ap Dwe threw Ah John upon the floor and while sitting upon his breast struck him with a hatchet, inflicting a terrible cut on the right side of the head. The wounded Chinaman was carried to the hospital unconscious, but it is thought he is not fatally injured. Ling Ap Dwe was placed in solitary confinement. He is noted for his treachery and is feared by the convicts who have to work near him. It was only six months ago that Ling Ap Dwe attempted to stab to death one John Church a colored convict from Quincy.

OTTAWA, December 1.—Premier Macdonald has promised to have some measure brought up during the coming session of Parliament to insure protection against the fraudulent practices which have become so frequent on this side of the line in bankrupts giving preference to certain creditors in the absence of any insolvent law.

Margaret Ahern, indicted for murder in the second degree for pushing a constable from her stoop and breaking his neck, was sentenced to three years in the penitentiary.

Killed by a Train.

WATERBURY, Conn., December 1.—The train on the New York & New England Railroad, due here at 7:45 Saturday night, struck and killed Bridget Hennessey, aged fourteen, who endeavored to cross the track in front of the engine. She was thrown about sixty feet and killed instantly.

Physical Patchwork.

In Rheumatism and Neuralgia there is much physical patchwork. The medicines taken have not gone to the seat of the disease. Not so with ATHLOPHOROS. It expels Rheumatism permanently. A case in point—that of William Bradley, 394 Columbus Avenue, New Haven, a driver for Adams Express. He says: "Was driven from my business for three months by an attack of Rheumatism: One bottle of Athlophoros cured me. Have been on my wagon every day since, rain or shine."

Thirty thousand patents were issued last year in great Britain against only 20,000 in this country. Our inventors must be tir themselves.

Look Out for Your Head

No matter what parts it may finally affect, catarrh always starts in the head, and belongs to the head. There is no mystery about the origin of this direful disease. It begins in a neglected cold. One of the kind that is "sure to be better in a few days." Thousands of victims know how it is by sad experience. Ely's Cream Balm cures colds in the head and catarrh in all its stages. Not a snuff nor a liquid. Applied with the finger to the nostrils.

Two men at work on Beech Mountain, near Forestburg, N. Y., killed 51 rattlesnakes, ranging from 18 inches to 4 feet in length.

Speer's Wine for Consumptives.

Consumptive persons are greatly benefitted by the use of Speer's Port Grape Wine. It gives nourishment when everything else fails, and physicians prescribe it as a rich, nutritious wine. Prominent physicians and members connected with the New York Board of Health have inspected Speer's vineyards and wine cellars and speak of his products in the highest terms. For sale by C. A. Wright & Co.

A clay which can be utilized in the manufacture of putty has been discovered in Attala, Miss.

Catarrh.

Is a very prevalent and exceedingly disagreeable disease, liable if neglected, to develop into serious consumption. Being a constitutional disease, it requires a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, acting through the blood, reaches every part of the system, effecting a radical and permanent cure of catarrh in even its most severe forms. Made only by C. I. Hood & Co. Lowell, Mass.

There are still living in Rochester, N. Y., 69 persons who voted at the first charter election, fifty years ago.

Hood's Sarsaparilla, acting through the blood, reaches every part of the system, and in this way positively cures catarrh.

"SLEEPING LOVE"

A fine steel engraving of Perault's charming picture, "Sleeping Love," has been offered by the publishers of Godey's Lady's Book to every new subscriber for the year 1885. The plate is a very artistic one, beautifully printed on thick paper of a size suitable for handsome framing. The subject, a little dimpled Love, adorned with nothing but his baby charms, is lying on a soft grassy couch, fast asleep among the wild flowers, his round, white limbs approaching the cool umbrage of a pond of water lillies. One little chubby hand rests lightly on his unstrung bow, which is lying near him, while the other hand is resting on his cheek, the plump fingers threading the wavy masses of his floating hair. Under the right arm and shoulder one little downy wing is tucked away, while the other peeps up from his back with pretty suggestiveness. Over head are drooping, shadowy boughs covered with rich foliage, and the background reveals a deep perspective of cool forest shade. The picture is of striking simplicity, yet remarkable composition, and the figure of the "Sleeping Love" himself, with drooping eyelids and softly parted lips that offset the rounded beauty of babyhood, is one of the prettiest you could well conceive of.—Messrs. J. H. Haulenbeck & Co., proprietors of Godey's Lady's Book, have produced this charming picture most successfully.

THE HARLEM RAILROAD.

Valuable Suggestion of Interest to Men Employed on all Railroads—Read it if You Would be Benefitted.

No man is better known along the line of the Harlem R. R. than Conductor Trowbridge. He writes as follows:

CONDUCTOR'S BOOK, HARLEM DEPOT, NEW YORK, Feb. 1881.

Dear Sir—I take pleasure in saying a word for Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. I have used it for two years for dyspepsia and derangement of the liver, and can say with emphasis that it always affords prompt and complete relief. Favorite Remedy is pleasant to the taste, thorough in its effects, never producing the slightest disagreeable or sickening sensation. Yours truly,

B. C. TROWBRIDGE.

But Mr. Trowbridge is not alone in his praise of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. Favorite Remedy is a positive cure for malaria as well as indigestion. Read the following from R. A. Campbell, foreman of the sorting room in the Montgomery paper mill:

MONTGOMERY, Orange Co., N. Y., Mar. 4, '84.

Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

Dear Sir—I have used for some time your valuable medicine, Favorite Remedy, for malaria, and it has proved an effectual cure. After having tried a great many other medicines for a disorder of this kind without avail, I find Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy affords complete satisfaction, and I do heartily recommend it to all who suffer as I did. R. A. CAMPBELL.

Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is a positive cure for malaria, kidney and liver diseases, and for all those ills peculiar to women.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

Quarterly meeting next Sunday.

The Sunday school are making preparations for a concert which will be held the last of the month.

Rev. W. Q. Burnett, of Tecumseh, occupied the pulpit Sunday morning, as Rev. W. J. Clack was not able to attend.

Ben Kelley, H. W. Stevens & Co. shipped one car load of hogs to Buffalo from here on Saturday.

Some farmers are plowing and say it turns over fine.

You can pay your taxes next Friday at the store of S. P. Smith. The treasurer Chas. DuBoise has appointed that the meeting place. The school tax is 68 cents on a hundred valuation.

Mrs. Burt Helm, of Coldwater, came to attend the funeral of Eddie Helm on Saturday but arrived too late. She spent the Sabbath with Mr. and Mrs. S. Helm, returning home Monday.

The Missionary meeting which was held at Mrs. W. P. Cadmus, on last week Wednesday was quite largely attended and all enjoyed a splendid time. Mrs. Cadmus knows how to make folks enjoy themselves.

The lecture given at the church on Thursday night of last week, by the Rev. Mr. Pitcher, a missionary from China, was very interesting.

Prof. E. A. Wilson, of Vasser, is home having had to close his school on account of diphtheria.

The church social will be held this week Friday night at the home of Dr. R. H. Nelson and a cordial invitation to all.

The little four year olds are turning their wistful eyes towards the old chimney corner to select a nail on which to hang their stocking as Christmas approacheth.

Dr. R. H. Nelson left Monday for Ligonier Ind. to see his sister Miss Allie Palmer, who is very sick.

The Literary elected the following officers for the society at a meeting held last Friday night.

Pres.—Martin Palmer.
1st Vice Pres.—G. P. Waring.
Sec.—Miss Kittie Clark.
Asst. Sect. Miss Ada Linn.
Treasurer—Ella Jackson.

They will hold their first meeting for the term next week Friday evening in the Hall where an interesting program will be carried out.

The additional school tax for the new school house in Dist. No. 1, Ridgeway, has so worked upon the mind of one of the Macon tax payers of the Dist. that while returning home one night last week he got lost in one of Sam. Rappleye's forty acre fields, and says that he was an hour and a half in finding his way out. He thinks he never saw as fine scenery in those parts before and has lived within a short distance all his life.

After a long sickness Eddie Helm passed away on Friday about 11 o'clock. The funeral was held at the church on Saturday afternoon. The remains were laid at rest in the Tecumseh cemetery, Rev. Geo. Hudson, of Tecumseh officiating.

Having a little leisure time, we with some of our friends, made Mrs. W. H. Arner and family, of Raisin, a short visit on last week Thursday. We found them all and enjoyed a very pleasant time. Eddie is running the farm giving his attention mostly to cabbage culture and pork raising. Albert is attending school at Ann Arbor. Charley has a situation with a hardware firm at Wellington, Ohio.

TIPTON TOPICS.

The new Congregational parsonage is nearly completed and will in a short time be occupied by Rev. Mr. Wall from Berrien county, Mich., who has been engaged to labor among the people for the next year. A new furnace has been placed in the church and everything looks favorable for a revival of its former prosperity.

Socials are numerous this fall and well attended.

Dances too are frequent and well patronized.

Albert Morseman and Wyman Wells have returned from their trip to Kansas and express themselves well pleased with the country they have visited.

It is said that arrangements have at last been satisfactorily made with the M. & O. Railway Co., concerning a depot at Tipton, and the work of building grading, etc., will soon commence.

A number of our citizens have the Kansas fever and unless it wears off a year from now will find a good many who are now residents of Franklin living on the fertile prairies of that State, which is destined on account of its great agricultural resources and healthy climate, to become one of the foremost commonwealths in the Union, its grasshopper repudiation notwithstanding.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

Rain and mist have quenched the music of November harps, but chilly refrains are preluding the long marked winter.

No news items of general interest are ripe enough to gather, for there is not enough concert of action among us to produce a genuine muss. Everybody is afflicted with self interest epidemic, and scrabbling about in a net-work of financial difficulty racking their brains and damaging the decalogue by trying to map out a plan of economy that will save me and mine. No doubt it will be a nice game, but isn't it most too intricate to play single-handed and merit divine approbation? Forgetfulness of other's woes is the name of it. Our Doctors have diagnosed the disease thoroughly but fail to prescribe a remedy. There is a great deal of enforced idleness at this season, and as hours must be freighted with something, there is a growing demand for amusement. Club dances, skating rinks, masquerades, concerts, and theatres are resorted to by many who can ill afford to bestow patronage because the price of such is too high, and what should become a moral benefit, has a pernicious effect on both pocket and heart growth. The policy that tempts to self-gratification by excluding others, needs an amendment. There is plenty of amusement in the world, but those most in need of it are practically debarred, because the price is not in harmony with their purse. The custom of asking 25 or 50 cents admission fee to a weekly entertainment, is one that enables the rich to attend without detriment to housekeeping, and sets caste to the tune of a very select audience. But how often can laboring men take their families? Not once a month, unless there is retrenchment from the cellar to eaves, and then half the time children are counted out, or only one selected and the rest left to magnify discontent, and mature plans for getting into the show somehow. Yet these people compose the majority, and appreciate amusements as much as any class known. They could spend a reasonable amount of time and money, in enjoying them, if they were conducted on the principle of greatest good to the greatest number. The entertainments are few, for which ten cents is not a fair remuneration for capital invested, in talent or otherwise. Besides it is a price that insures managers full houses, and puts it out of the power of pretty cliques, or fortune's favorites to deal out loss and mortification with which to drape vacant seats, as caprice or prejudice dictates.

Those who sell amusement have great opportunities to cultivate the good or bad, inherent in the natures of those who buy, or to sow broadcast, envy, discontent and ill will among those prudence or penury holds aloof. They can awaken love of right, and cultivate taste for refining influences cheaply and with assured daily pecuniary and spiritual profit to themselves, or they can be human sponges to absorb the coin of society weaklings. But will the rich come if we set a price within reach of all? asks one. It would be the best reason for withdrawal of patronage they ever had; gentlemen please try it and give the children a chance.

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

We noticed the familiar face of our townsman D. St. John on our streets during the fore part of last week. He was looking after some business interests here. He will return to Clinton with his business and his family in the early spring. So you see Clinton still has attractions for those who have sought a better place and have not found it.

The Clinton Local made its appearance among our people on Saturday last. It has the appearance of being a sprightly little sheet. It is replete with the news of this and neighboring towns. We bespeak for it a brilliant future and hope it may meet with the success it merits. So come up and subscribe at once and make the proprietor's sum of success.

Some of our people were considerably excited at the conduct of a vicious dog kept by our new comer a Mr. Cooley who recently moved to Clinton from Sand Lake. A short time ago the said dog having bitten two or three of our citizens notice was served on the owner of the dog according to law to kill said dog within twenty four hours. Whereupon the good woman of the house gave the officers permission to sacrifice the dog, and now the dog is dead. He biteth no more and now somebody who killed a valuable dog belonging to Harry Lancaster waxeth hot.

The good people of Clinton are now sympathizing somewhat with the parties of a case of pure domestic infelicity, the parties to which belong in our neighboring township of Manchester. Porter has the fort in peaceable possession while his wife has taken rooms at David G. Service's. May their bliss in separation be equal to the connubial bliss enjoyed in their first marital relations.

The Davises, Dan and Kos, are making nice improvements in the News Office where they will soon commence business. Kos will carry on the Jeweler's business and will keep a full line of jewelry and silver ware suitable for Holiday presents. All who anticipate buying anything in that line for friend or sweetheart will find something there nice and unique in style. Dan will have charge of the confectionary and the culinary department. We bespeak for the boys a liberal patronage. They wish all to understand that the people from the country coming to town on business can always find at their establishment something to eat but nothing to drink but tea and coffee. Oysters in any and every style. You Tecumseh folks remember this when you come to Clinton.

The Sunday school connected with the Congregational church will give a public entertainment at the Town Hall on Monday evening December 15, consisting of select reading, declamations, singing and a short address by the preacher.

The Ladies of St. John's church have now their arrangements completed for their annual fair in the afternoon of Friday the 12th. Entertainment in the evening will consist of tableaux, recitations and drama. The care and labor bestowed upon the drama merits a large patronage from the public, which we think they will receive. From what we know of the ladies having the matter in charge, we can safely say that they will have an excellent supper, which will be served from 5 to 7 o'clock P. M., after which the exercises of the evening will commence. We think we can safely say that the fair and all else connected therewith, will be such that we shall expect to see a large delegation from Tecumseh, who will thereby help to forward a worthy enterprise. Tecumseh friends come along. Supper, 15 cents; entertainment, 15 cents. Come out.

Married at the Baptist Parsonage on Tuesday evening, 9th inst., Charley Keysor and Miss Hattie Codling. May the blessings of Heaven attend them.

Jas. McDermott has quit his position as night watchman in the woolen mill and Fred Wainwright has taken his place as night watcher.

W. S. Kimball's little boy has now a little sister, weight nine pounds, and now Mr. Kimball walks erect and with as much precision as a West Point Cadet.

John Hause has moved his egg-packing business from the office of the Town Clerk into the saloon building formerly occupied by Jas. Carroll near the Railroad on Chicago street. Call and see him and he will convince you that Clinton is the place to sell not only the eggs, but chickens as well.

The social of the Congregational church was held on Wednesday evening of this week and very well attended. The receipts in cash were very liberal.

We understand that the Town Clerk has taken in and drawn orders for nine hundred and eighteen woodchucks so far this year, and still they come. What would the number have been if the township had been twice as wide as it now is? The amount paid so far for woodchuck scalps this year is $137.70, besides the clerk's fees.

Nelson Kinney returned from Jonesville last Monday, where he had been to see his son-in law, John Mills, who is very sick.

William Onsted has been having his house papered and painted inside. The material used was first class, and all that need be said about the work is that it was performed by James Braynard and Charles Nearing.

L. H. Sheeler and wife were agreeably surprised Saturday evening by receiving a visit from a large number of friends. All had a pleasant time and some valuable gifts were presented to Mr. and Mrs. Sheeler.

The subject of entertaining and wholesome reading for the family circle is one of practical interest in every household. It cannot be denied that the tendency of the American press is in too large a degree toward sensationalism and in some instances even the sentiments of purity and sacredness is an insufficient barrier against the all-pervading desire of being novel and startling in the presentation of news. The exceptions to this common rule among metropolitan journals of the day are so few as to be worthy of notice when encountered. The CHICAGO WEEKLY NEWS is one of the few papers of which it may be strictly said that nothing objectionable to pure thought and morality ever appears in its columns. It is an enterprising paper—none in the West more so—but more than that, it is a clean paper, one which it is safe to take into the family circle. The CHICAGO WEEKLY NEWS and the TECUMSEH HERALD will both be sent to any address, for $2.25 a year, postage included. Send subscriptions to this office.

The Coldwater Republican says that Mr. T. H. Moss, "the horse radish man," has commenced to grate 4,200 pounds, or over 100 bushels of trimmed roots of horse radish, raised on a piece of ground 14x15 rods in Coldwater township. He finds a ready market for it in the towns along the L. S. & M. S. and M. C. railroads. Coldwater horse radish is becoming as famous as Kalamazoo celery.

I.

Suppose that every wind and breeze
That lightly blows and rustles by
Should only whisper through the trees:
I.

Suppose the sea, the flashing sea,
One sound alone should carry nigh
The shore, and it should ever be:
I.

Suppose the happy, flitting birds,
That warble 'neath the sunny sky,
Should sing (could they indulge in words),
I.

Suppose the fragrant, lovely flowers
Should wear a tint of beauteous dye,
And on each petal we could read:
I.

Suppose the silvery, summer rain,
Feeding the springs and streamlets dry,
Should have this musical (?) refrain:
I.

Suppose the cricket by the hearth,
Whose chirpings wintry storms defy,
One note of cheer should give the earth:
I.

Suppose the thunder's hollow roar
And crash, in empyrean high,
Should have this echo, and no more:
I.

Suppose Niagara, clothed in mist
And pride of glorious majesty,
Should utter always, as we list:
I.

The brilliant stars pursue their way,
The sun its beams does not deny,
They fill their role, but never say:
I.

At her appointed hour the June
Brings roses; yet there is no cry
Of, Look, who walks in blossom shoon?
I.

Yet man, the egotist, will not learn
From Nature, bounteous though shy
Of speech. Good works will honor earn
I.

Need not so often be the great,
Colossal pronoun, if we try
In proper bounds to regulate:
I.

GRANDMOTHER'S STORY.

How She Made a Hiding-Place of a Brass Kettle.

It was a stormy day, and the children were popping corn over the glowing coals in the grate.

Grandma sat with her knitting work near the fire, and the kitten was chasing a great white fluffy kernel around the room with her frisky paws.

"When I was a little girl and lived at the West," said grandma, "my brothers and I used to pop corn in the ashes."

"How could you do that?" said Tom, "I shouldn't think it would have popped at all."

"O, we didn't use coal ashes, but scraped a clear place in front of the great wood fire, put the corn down in little heaps, and then covered each heap carefully with hot ashes, placing a live coal or so on the top, and in a little while they would come popping out all over the floor."

"What fun!" said Meg. "I wish we had a fire-place and a wood fire."

"Grandma," said Bess, who had been reading frontier stories, and was more interested in Indians than popping corn at present, having become somewhat tired of the occupation, "did you ever see any Indians in those days?"

"I saw one, and he frightened me nearly out of my senses."

"O, do tell us about it!" cried all the children in the same breath. "The corn is all popped now, and it will be so nice to hear a story while we are eating it."

"Wait till I count the stitches on my needle, and then, if you will promise not to ask me to tell it over again for a month at least, I will tell you the story."

They promised, and seating themselves in a row, each with a dish of corn in his or her lap, waited impatiently for the stitches to be counted.

"When our family moved to the West," began grandma, "I was only eight years old. It was a pretty, but lonely spot where our little log house was built, in a clearing not far from the edge of the prairie. If you went far enough into the woods or across the prairie, you could hear the wolves howl at night.

"There were no roads for a great distance, only a path or trail, as they called it, and our nearest neighbor lived nearly a mile away.

"When we first went there, we had a great dread of Indians—or at least mother and we children had, though father used to laugh at us, saying that there were no hostile Indians in the region, and the remnant of a copper-colored tribe, which still lingered on the outskirts of the State, would have to run the gauntlet of—I don't know how many blockades to get at us.

"But it was only a very few years before that they were scalping and committing all sorts of depredations within a mile or two of the spot where we were living, and my mother was continually on the lookout for them, though she was very careful not to say anything to frighten us children.

"As for me, I was a nervous, delicate child, and there was not a day during the first six months of our life in this new country that I didn't imagine that I saw one. If a tuft of leaves stirred out in the still twilight, I was sure that it was the feather in an Indian's cap. If I heard the cattle tramping about in the underbrush, I was sure that a whole horde of Indians were coming to ransack the house. If I looked out into the moonlight, every shadow took the grim shape of a chief, tomahawk and all. If I peered up the wide chimney to see the sparks from the fire fly up to the stars on a winter's night, I never failed to encounter twinkling, sly and terrible eyes gazing down into mine."

"Did you, truly?" inquired little Joe, with his mouth agape with astonishment.

"Why, no, Joe. Grandma said she only imagined it all, you know, because she was afraid," explained wise Bess, impatient of the interruption.

"And every night before I went to sleep," grandma continued, "I heard all sorts of noises, which I had no doubt were Indians trying to break into the house, shaking the bolts of the doors or tramping about on the roof over my head. But as time passed on these fears and imaginations gradually wore away, and when summer came even I had forgotten nearly all about Indians.

"It had been a late, cold spring. The rain dripped off the eaves and blurred the windows nearly every day; and when the sky was clear, a chilly wind blew, that frightened back the leaves and blossoms, and stopped the birds' songs in their very throats.

"But when June came, the weather was so lovely that we children played out of doors the whole day long. The flowers seemed to be making up for lost time and crowded everywhere, dressed in all sorts of pretty colors. They peeped through the chinks of our log cabin, climbed to its very roof in pretty, graceful vines, and made it, as crude and clumsy as it was, a perfect bower of beauty.

"I was so weary after those long, sunny days out of doors, that I went to sleep as soon as my head touched the pillow, and heard no more shaking bolts or feet tramping overhead. Mother no longer searched every nook and corner, every crevice and closet, before going to bed; and we often left the house by itself in the daytime, with doors and windows wide open, and nothing but the sunbeams, or perhaps a stray chicken, had ever ventured to stray within.

"One warm afternoon in July, mother and the boys went berrying, leaving me at home alone. Father was at work on what we called the 'burnt land,' three-quarters of a mile away. I had expected to be one of the berrying party; but as I had been out of doors all the forenoon, and was afflicted with a headache, mother thought it would not do at all for me to go out again under the hot sun.

"'You won't be afraid to stay in the house alone, will you, Mary?' said she. 'I don't know what could possibly harm you. I wish you would feed the chickens about four o'clock. Be sure to take the gingerbread out of the oven in about ten minutes, and don't let pussy get her nose into the custard-pies which are cooling in the window.'

"I wasn't afraid the least bit in the world. The sunshine was streaming in at the open door; the birds were singing in the bushes outside, and the speckled kitten was chasing her tail around the kitchen floor. Who would think of being afraid, or even lonely, when everything was so bright and pleasant?

"I took the gingerbread out of the oven. It was what folks called a tin kitchen, an affair with several shelves, which stood before the blaze in the fire-place. Everybody used it in old times, before stoves were plenty.

"Then I covered the fire with ashes, that it might not go entirely out. When it was time to boil the tea-kettle for supper, you could rake the ashes away, and there would still be hot coals under them.

"Then I sat down and rocked by the cool window, where a breeze blew in through the morning-glory vines, and soon fell into a sort of doze. But it was not long before a bumble-bee came in and wakened me, and, glancing out of the window, I beheld a sight which fairly froze my blood with horror.

"It was a tall Indian, dressed precisely as I had seen Indians dressed in pictures, making long, but leisurely strides toward the house.

"He had a sort of topknot feathers on his head, like that of one of our cropple-crowned hens, and I could see that his long, brown arms were quite bare, and looked like copper in the sunlight.

"What should I do? where could I hide myself? My heart was beating so violently that I felt almost suffocated, and I stood for a moment in the middle of the floor, unable to move or think.

"But there was no time to be lost. He was coming so near that I could almost see his face now, and what, oh! what if he should find me when he got into the house!

"It did not once occur to me to bolt the doors; but, if it had, there would have been hardly time for the bolts were very heavy, and it was as much as I could do to move them, and then the windows were all open too, and though they were very small, the Indian might have squeezed through one of them at a pinch.

"I ran wildly toward the bedroom, and was about to creep under the bed. But no, that would not do, I thought. His long arms might reach me there. Then I rushed through the kitchen into the shed, and looked about me in a perfect frenzy.

"Suddenly the huge brass kettle which had been my grandmother's caught my eye, hanging from a beam overhead, and quick as thought I climbed first on to father's work-bench, which stood underneath, thus, obtaining a footing on a wooden peg which was driven into the wall, I managed to swing myself on to the beam, and from thence let myself down into the kettle, which was large enough to hide me completely.

"I had never accomplished such a feat before; but I was a light and nimble child, and in my fear and excitement it seemed easy enough to perform.

"The kettle had not ceased moving after my leap into its brassy depths, when the Indian entered the door. I was sure that he would see it, and gave myself up for lost. I was really paralyzed with fear, and if I had tried to scream, I do not think I could have done so.

"But he evidently did not look up in that direction. He stood stock-still in the middle of the floor for a moment or two, uttering some indistinct words in his guttural Indian tongue. Then I heard him stride into the kitchen, and from thence into the bedroom, still talking away as fast as he could talk. Then I heard him tramping about overhead. He had climbed the ladder into the loft.

"But in a few moments he was back again, investigating the pantry. Mother had been doing a whole week's baking that morning, and the shelves were filled with nice brown loaves of bread, custard and berry pies, a great milk-pan full of cookies, and the gingerbread which I had just taken out of the oven.

"Judging by the sounds which I heard from that direction, I thought he must be eating; and every once in a while there came a deep grunt of satisfaction, as if he had found something that he liked very much. Then, for a little while, there was deep silence, and then, to my great relief, he stole very quietly and swiftly out of the house and away, taking the same path by which he came.

"I peeped out from my hiding-place and saw him disappear in the distance. Then a mist came over my eyes and I lost consciousness. I had been expecting every moment that he would espy the kettle, which was so huge that it generally attracted attention, and proceed to investigate; and now my relief was so great that I was entirely overcome.

"When I recovered my senses I heard my mother's voice calling me:

"'Mary, Mary, where are you?'

"'O, mother,' screamed my brother Cyrus, who always repaired to the pantry the minute he got into the house, 'just look here! All the baking's gone, pies 'n' everything, and there's crumbs all over the floor.'

"'There's been an Injun here,' I gasped, from my perch overhead.

"'I should think so,' said my mother, who gazed up into my white face, the very picture of consternation. 'How in the world did you get up there, child?'

"Just then father came running in quite out of breath.

"'Have you seen anything of an Indian?' he gasped. 'One has been seen running toward the river, laden with stolen property, quilts and coats and things, they say. I didn't know but that he had been making ravages here, as you were all gone berrying.'

"Then I piped up and told my story; but when father stood on the bench and took me out of the kettle, I fainted again in his arms.

"On investigation, it was found that the Indian had not only taken all the bread and cake and pies in the house, but had seized upon a gray patchwork quilt, father's winter overcoat and a bright scarlet petticoat of mother's. The silver spoons and a heavy silver tankard—the very one that is standing on the sideboard now—were all in plain sight; but he probably had no idea of their value and so left them untouched.

"All the men in the settlement immediately turned out in pursuit of the thief; but they did not capture him. And he was never seen or heard of in that region again."—Susan Hartley Swett, in Golden Days.

HE SAVED HIS LIFE.

General W. S. Harney Tells How He Once Saved Abraham Lincoln from Death.

Every schoolboy has heard of General W. S. Harney, the Indian fighter, and will be glad to know that the old hero still lives at the age of eighty-four, and, with the exception of a somewhat impaired vision and a slightly defective memory, enjoys excellent health. He is now on a little pleasure tour from his home in St. Louis, and has just married his housekeeper, Mrs. St. Cyr. Both of his daughters are married and living in France. One of them married Count de None, of the French army, and the other, Viscount de Thury, a French gentleman. The son of the General lives in St. Louis. "I was in command in Missouri when the war broke out," said the General to a reporter recently, "and had I not been relieved by President Lincoln in May, 1861, I am sure there would have been no bloodshed in that State; but I never blamed Mr. Lincoln, for he and I were old friends. So much political pressure was brought to bear upon him by Frank P. Blair and others that I suppose he had to relieve me. And yet," continued the General smiling, "Mr. Lincoln never saw me without reminding me that I once saved his life."

"How was that, General."

"Well, said the General laughing, Mr. Lincoln was Captain of a company of volunteers, and I was Captain of a company of regulars during the Black Hawk war. I remember well how Captain Lincoln used to come to our rendezvous, General Taylor's headquarters, and tell stories that amused us immensely. He used to lie on the grass and very frequently would say: 'That reminds me,' and begin a funny story.

"One day Lincoln said to me: 'I say, Harney, let's pick out four or five shots from our commands and go gunning for Indians on our own hook.' 'All right, Lincoln,' said I; 'but do you know anything about Indian fighting?' 'Well, not much, but I am a pretty good shot.' 'That will do to start on,' said I, 'but let me tell you thing—never look for a redskin in front of you; look out for your flanks.' Well, we started out and soon came on signs of redskins. All of a sudden, while I was watching the flanks, I saw an Indian drawing a bead on Lincoln. As quick as I could possibly do so I leveled my rifle and fired. I didn't hit him—at least he didn't fall—and he ran away. Even after that Captain Lincoln insisted that I had saved his life.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

She Wore the Steamer.

A Confederate officer during the war captured a Federal steamer in the Gulf and brought it into Galveston. Federal steamers were not so plentiful as the gossip of the war would seem to indicate; and this prize was to the officer as the apple of his eye.

Being called away to Red River he left the steamer in charge of his wife—she had his power of attorney.

His Red River expedition did not turn out satisfactorily. His troops were overpowered with superior numbers and badly beaten.

Their commander returned hastily to get his steamer and secure reinforcements. On arriving in Galveston he learned to his dismay that his steamer was gone.

"Where's my wife?" he asked impatiently of the servants.

"She gone to Missy C.'s party, Massa," said the oldest and most faithful of them.

Without stopping to dress, he hurried to Mrs. C.'s, covered with dust and mud, and presented himself at the door.

He was shown in. His wife excused herself to her cavalier.

"What is the matter?" she asked.

"Where's my steamer?" said the officer in tones of suppressed excitement.

"Why, here it is, my dear," said his beautiful wife.

And then she pointed to a diamond cross glittering on her fair breast.—Ingleside.

AYER'S Cherry Pectoral.

No other complaints are so insidious in their attack as those affecting the throat and lungs; none so trifled with by the majority of sufferers. The ordinary cough or cold, resulting perhaps from a trifling or unconscious exposure, is often but the beginning of a fatal sickness. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL has well proven its efficacy in a forty years' fight with throat and lung diseases, and should be taken in all cases without delay.

A Terrible Cough Cured.

"In 1857 I took a severe cold, which affected my lungs. I had a terrible cough, and passed many a night without sleep. The doctors gave me up. I tried AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, which relieved my lungs, induced sleep, and afforded me the best appetite, leading to recovery of my strength. By the continued use of the PECTORAL a permanent cure was effected. I am now 62 years old, hale and hearty, and am satisfied your CHERRY PECTORAL saved me.

HORACE, FAIRBROTHER."

Rockingham, Vt., July 13, 1882.

Croup.—A Mother's Tribute.

"While in the country last winter my little boy, three years old, was taken ill with croup; it seemed as if he would die from strangulation. One of the family suggested the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, a bottle of which was always kept in the house. This was tried in small and frequent doses, and to our delight in less than half an hour the little patient was breathing easily. The doctor said that the CHERRY PECTORAL had saved my darling's life. Can you wonder at our gratitude? Sincerely yours,

MRS. EMMA GEDNEY."

159 West 128th St., New York, May 16, 1882.

"I have used AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL in my family for several years, and do not hesitate to pronounce it the most effectual remedy for coughs and colds we have ever tried. A. J. CRANE."

Lake Crystal, Minn., March 13, 1882.

"I suffered for eight years from Bronchitis, and after trying many remedies with no success, I was cured by the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. JOSEPH WALDEN."

Byhalia, Miss., April 5, 1882.

"I cannot say enough in praise of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, believing as I do that but for its use I should long since have died from lung troubles. F. BRAGDON."

Palestine, Texas, April 22, 1882.

No case of an affection of the throat or lungs exists which cannot be greatly relieved by the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and it will always cure when the disease is not already beyond the control of medicine.

Catarrh Can be Cured

That exceedingly disagreeable and very prevalent disease, catarrh, is caused by scrofulous taint in the blood. Hood's Sarsaparilla, by its powerful purifying and vitalizing action upon the blood, speedily removes the cause, and thus effects a radical and permanent cure of catarrh. Those who suffer from its varied symptoms—uncomfortable flow from the nose, offensive breath, ringing and bursting noises in the ears, swelling of the soft parts of the throat, nervous prostration, etc.—should take Hood's Sarsaparilla and be cured.

Serious consequences are liable to ensue if catarrh is not attended to in season. The disease frequently destroys the sense of smell and often developes into bronchitis or pulmonary consumption. Undoubtedly many cases of consumption originate in catarrh. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures catarrh and has even effected remarkable cures of consumption itself, in its early stages. A book containing statements of many cures by Hood's Sarsaparilla, will be sent free to all who send address to C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

The Best Medicine

"I have suffered with catarrh in my head for years, and paid out hundreds of dollars for medicines, but have heretofore received only temporary relief. I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla and now my catarrh is nearly cured, the weakness of my body is all gone, my appetite is good—in fact, I feel like another person. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best medicine I have ever taken." MRS. A. CUNNINGHAM, Providence, R. I.

Catarrh and Impure Blood

"Hood's Sarsaparilla has helped me more for catarrh and impure blood than anything else I ever used." A. BALL, Syracuse, N. Y.

"I suffered three years with catarrh, and my general health was poor in consequence. When I took Hood's Sarsaparilla I found I had the right remedy. The catarrh is yielding, as Hood's Sarsaparilla is cleansing my blood, and the general tone of my system is improving." FRANK WASHBURN, Rochester, N. Y.

WHOLESALE POISONING.

Two Whole Families Poisoned with Arsenic and Strychnine—Discharged Servants Arrested.

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, Va., December 9.—Excitement continues in this county over the recent poisoning at Fort Springs, Drs. Beard, of Anderson, and Crowley, of Lewisburg, are in attendance on the sick, of whom several are still in a precarious condition. Three attempts were made, and arsenic and strychnine were used each time. The families of Matthew Mann and James W. Goodwin, his son-in-law, reside within fifty yards of each other and take their meals together.

November 24 the first attempt was made, the milk having been poisoned, but the acid taste of the strychine prevented the family from drinking it. Mr. Goodwin was made dangerously sick; but the milk was thrown away without examination. On the 27th a second attempt was made. The family partook of biscuit and Mr. Mann and wife narrowly escaped death, still no steps at detection were taken. The last attempt was made Monday night last, at which time the milk was poisoned and was partaken of by all but two persons and twelve members were put in violent convulsions. Dr. Beard, upon examination of the milk, found particles of strychnine glittering on its surface. The adults have been removed from danger, but four children are now wavering between life and death. The use of arsenic and strychnine together prevented certain death.

What lent a mystery to the affair was that every person about the house, including the servants, had been poisoned. A detective worked upon the case, and after three days Esther and Mary Johnson, colored, who lived near by, were arrested and committed to jail. They had been discharged from the employ of the families and were supposed to have been actuated by revenge. They procured the poison separately at Lewisburg and are supposed to have placed it in the milk and flour at night. In their desire for revenge they used too much poison and thus saved the lives of nine out of thirteen persons.

Ida Lewis Connects Herself With the Church.

NEWPORT, R. I., December 9.—Ida Lewis, whose home is in the lighthouse on Lime Rock, and who has rescued many persons from watery graves, became seriously ill a few months ago and thoughts of the hereafter came to her, and she determined, as she says, to serve the Lord if He would give her health. She recovered, and yesterday was received into full fellowship at the Thames Street Methodist Church. In expectation of numerous candidates for membership appearing, the church was crowded, several were given communion and then a frail appearing woman of about thirty-eight years, with interesting features, presented herself. This was Ida Lewis, and she was quickly recognized. When she reached the side of the minister, Rev. Mr. Clark, he did not dispose of her as quickly as the others, but delivered a brief address, pointing out lessons from her courageous life, and referring to the reward which awaits her above. Directly after the service Miss Lewis was driven to her island home.

A Hercules Resisting Arrest.

WHEELING, W. Va., December 9.—Sarah A. Plyman, of Braxton County, one of the most remote mountain counties in the State, swore out a warrant last Friday for the arrest of her husband, Jacob Plyman, who, she said, had beaten and maltreated her shamefully. Henry Duffield and two assistants were sent to Crete's Mountain to make the arrest. The most ample preparations were made to capture Plyman, who is nearly seven feet high, and a hercules in strength. In a little shanty on the side of the mountain the officers found their man and asked him to surrender. He replied by firing with a Winchester rifle. The constables returned the fire, and others in the shanty fired shot-guns, deer-guns and revolvers. The firing was kept up for over an hour, when the officers, all of them severely wounded, withdrew for reinforcements and warrants for those who had assisted Plyman. A squad of deputy constable left here yesterday morning to capture the mountain fortress and bring its occupants to the Braxton Court-house.

Fatal Duel of Rivals.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., December 9.—A terrible tragedy was enacted at McKinney, a small town on the Cincinnati Southern Railway, late Saturday afternoon. Two young men named William Moore and John Adams, were both paying attentions to a young woman. They were fast friends and their rivalry was good natured until two weeks since, when the young lady began to show a decided preference for Adams. This nettled his rival, but he made no complaint. Saturday afternoon the two men went hunting, and finally Moore broached the question of their rivalry. A quarrel ensued, and almost simultaneously the two men stepped back, leveled their guns and fired. Moore fell dead with a dozen buckshot in his head. Adams received a charge of shot in his breast, which caused his death yesterday.

Heavy Snow Storm in Wyoming.

CHEYENNE, Wyo., December 9.—The snow storm, which has covered the ground here to the depth of several inches, was general to the north and west of here and on the line of the Union Pacific, the banks of the snow were so heavy that trains only got through by the use of several additional engines. On Sherman Hill the snow in places had drifted as high as the tops of the coaches, and the train which arrived here Sunday night was several times stranded, but the engines butted their way through. The snow did not pack, otherwise there would be a blockade. The passengers relate some thrilling experiences.

Train Robbers Arrested.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., December 9.—Sunday morning blood-hounds were put on the trail of the train robbers and followed into the city, and before noon Joseph Cook, J. C. Jones, John Clifford, Charles Campbell, and a boy named Parker had been arrested. Jones will probably be released. Three of the men arrested have been identified as having been among the robbers. The State has offered a reward of $1,000 for the capture of the robbers, and the railroad have added a like amount.

Will Make Hats Themselves.

SOUTH NORWALK, Conn., December 9.—The striking hatters have formed a co-operative hat manufacturing association, and over $5,000 is subscribed to the scheme. A building lot has been bought for $1,300 in cash. A building will be erected at once. The factories are still guarded and manufacturers still profess fear of violent outbreaks.

Found Hanging in the Woods.

COLUMBUS, O., December 9.—Joseph Buchner was found yesterday morning hanging to a tree in the woods west of the Children's Home. Letters on his person indicate that he was from Pittsburgh. The cause of the suicide is unknown.

Rheumatism.

Usually settles in the back or limbs, and often so completely overpowers its victims that all business or labor has to be abandoned. Our readers should remember that Hoods Sarsaparilla is not recommended as a positive specific for rheumatism; its proprietors doubt if there is, or can be, such a remedy. But many people who were most severely afflicted, state that they have been positively cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla. The disease if often the result of impure blood,—hence the power of this great medicine over it. Its success in many severe cases justifies us in recommending its use to all sufferers from rheumatism. 100 doses One Dollar.

It costs not less than $32,000,000 annually to support the dogs of the United States.

When a remedy has proven itself to be a cure for consumption and a perfect lung restorer, it should be kept in every well regulated home. We refer to Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, a single dose of which will cure an ordinary cough or cold. A few bottles will cure consumption. It is very pleasant to take.

Where Did Potatoes Come From?

Nobody knows precisely where the potato came from originally. It has been found, apparently indigenous, in many parts of the world. Mr. Darwin, for instance, found it wild in the Chonos Archipelago. Sir W. J. Hooker says that it is common at Valparaiso, where it grows abundantly in the sandy hills near the sea. In Peru and other parts of South America it appears to be at home; and it is a noteworthy fact that Mr. Darwin should have noted it both in the humid forests of the Chonos Archipelago and among the Central Chilian mountains, where sometimes rain does not fall for six months at a stretch. It was to the colonists whom Sir Walter Raleigh sent out in Elizabeth's reign that we are indebted for our potatoes.

Herriot, who went out with these colonists, and who wrote an account of his travels, makes what may, perhaps, be regarded as the earliest mention of this vegetable. Under the heading of "Roots" he mentions what he calls the "openawk." "These roots," he says, "are round, some large as a walnut, others much larger. They grow on damp soils, many hanging together as if fixed on ropes. They are good food, either boiled or roasted."

At the beginning of the seventeenth century this root was planted, as a curious exotic, in the garden of the nobility, but it was long ere it came into general use. Many held them to be poisonous, and it would seem not altogether unreasonably so either. The potato is closely related to the deadly-nightshade and the mandrake, and from its stems and leaves may be extracted a very powerful narcotic. In England prejudice against it was for a long time very strong, especially among the poor.

Is your system running down? Is there a feeling of decrepitude taken possession of you? Are the functions of your digestive and uniary organs impaired? Is your blood bad? Do sores and pimples trouble you? Do you suffer from aches and pains? Are you weak, and does the least exertion give you fatigue? Beware! Regain perfect health by using Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla.

During a political campaign in Michigan a well known lawyer was addressing an audience composed principally of farmers in Gratiot county. In order to win the confidence, he said: "My friends, my sympathies have always been with the tiller of the soil. My father was a practical farmer, and so was my grandfather before him. I was myself reared on a farm, and was, so to speak, born between two stalks of corn." Here the speaker was rudely interrupted by some one in the audience who exclaimed: "A pumpkin by jingo!"

For scrofula, syphilitic disorders, thin and watery blood, sluggish liver (indicated by uniary sediments,) diseased mucous membrane, indicated by both nasal and uniary catarrh, inflamed eyelids, ect.) use Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaprilla. It gradually rebuilds a broken down constitution and restores robust health and strength to every part. No other remedy equals it.

Weight by Measuring.

The following rule for finding out the weight of an animal by measuring may prove convenient: "See that the animal stands square; then take his circumference behind the shoulder-blade—this is the girth. Then measure from the bone of the tail which plumbs the line with the hinder part of the buttock, and direct the string along the back to the forepart of the shoulder-blade; this will be the length. Then work the figures thus: Suppose the girth of bullock 6 feet 4 inches, length 5 feet 3 inches, which multiplied together make 33 square superficial feet; and these multiplied by 23—the number of pounds allowed for each superficial foot of cattle, measuring less than seven and more than five feet in girth—make 759 pounds. When the animal measures less than nine and more than seven feet in girth, 31 is the number of pounds to be estimated for each superficial foot. And suppose a small animal to measure 2 feet in girth and 2 feet in length, these multiplied together make 4 feet, which multiplied by 11—the number of pounds allowed for each square foot when cattle measure less than 3 feet in girth—make 44 pounds. Again, suppose a calf or sheep, etc., to measure 4 feet 6 inches in girth, and 3 feet 9 inches in length, that multiplied together, makes 16 square feet, and these multiplied by 16—the number of pounds allowed for cattle measuring less than 5 and more than 3 feet in girth—make 256 pounds. The dimensions of cattle, sheep, calves and hogs, taken this way, will give the weight of the four quarters of the animal, sinking the offal. A deduction must be made for animals half fat—of one pound in twenty from those that are fat; and for a cow that has had calves one pound must be allowed, in addition to the one for not being fat, upon every twenty."

It Will Cure You!

GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS are the great blood purifier, liver and kidney remedy and life giving principle, a perfect renovator and invigorator of the system carrying away all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition, enriching it, refreshing and invigorating both mind and body. They are easy of administration, prompt in their action, certain in their results, safe and reliable in all forms of disease. Every moment of our lives, every part of our bodies, is wearing out and is being built up anew. This work is accomplished by the blood. The blood if pure makes the entire circuit of the body every seven minutes. But if it becomes weak or vitiated and does not perform its work properly the system is actually poisoned by the worn-out matter clogging the vital organs instead of leaving the body. Cleanse the blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, sores, etc. Keep the liver in order, the blood pure, health of the system will follow. Take GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS and no others. Sold by Baker & Hall and C. A. Wright & Co.

TECUMSEH, MICH., DEC. 11, 1884.

THE HERALD FOR 1885.

Ten years ago, on the 15th day of November last past, we purchased the TECUMSEH HERALD of U. M. Barlingame and took possession of the property the same day. Those ten years have witnessed great improvements. We have had our ups and downs, have seen periods of prosperity and seasons of adversity the same as other business men; but viewing the decade as a whole, we have abundant reason to feel satisfied with the present status of the business. The HERALD establishment to-day represents an actual cash investment more than eight times as large as the purchase price which we paid for the property; and we enter upon the eleventh year of our life in journalism with a firmer faith than ever in our ultimate success and a stronger determination to achieve it.

In announcing our plans for the new year, we shall indulge in no flourish of promises. The HERALD has made a record in the newspaper field. Its future can be judged in the light of the past. Our principal aim shall be to make the HERALD a good local family newspaper. General news, state news, and family reading will not be neglected, nor will editorial comment be eschewed. The HERALD is not, and never has been, a neutral paper. It has been, and will continue to be, an independent paper. We shall not shrink from expressing our honest opinions upon all subjects, whenever the occasion may seem to demand it.

Recognizing the tendency of the times towards reduced expenditure and economy in all things, we have arranged our subscription rates accordingly. The price of one copy for one year will remain the same as heretofore. New subscribers handing in their names at once will receive the paper for the present month of December free. All who pay one year in advance at full rates will receive as a premium a fine lithograph portrait of Grover Cleveland; 21x28 inches in size, the retail price of which is $1.00. People who prefer a cash reduction can be accommodated by clubbing with other papers. Our club schedule contains nearly all the papers and periodicals which are generally taken in this vicinity. Nearly every farmer in Northern Lenawee takes from three to six newspapers, and many receive a dozen. Selections can be made from the following list, and by taking several papers at once, a liberal discount will be given from regular rates.

Sample copies, to any address, free. Old subscribers will be entitled to all the privileges granted new ones, by settling arrearages to Jan. 1, 1885, and paying one year in advance.

The Ohio man is not likely to be as numerous at Washington during the next four years as heretofore.

In round numbers, Michigan gave Garfield 185,000 votes; Blaine, 193,000; Hancock and Weaver, together, 166,000; Cleveland and Butler, together, 190,000. The prohibition vote grew from a thousand to about twenty thousand.

The Prohibition state central committee met last week and talked over the situation. They resolved to continue their organization and to call a state convention to meet Feb. 4th, 1885, to place in nomination a ticket for Supreme Judge and regents of the University.

The New York Sun says: The cackling of geese saved Rome. A few glasses of wine and brandy lost the American colonies to Great Britain. A lamp upset by a cow nearly destroyed the city of Chicago. A hoopskirt in one of the battles of the rebellion saved the federal army from a disastrous defeat. Three words uttered by a fool elected Grover Cleveland president of the United States.

The Pittsburg Telegram is responsible for the following: Jay Gould's little boy recently went to visit some country relatives. Early in the morning he arose, and missing his uncle, asked one of his cousins, "Where's Uncle Jabez gone?" "He's gone to water stock," replied Jabez' little boy. "What, so early?" exclaimed little Jay Gould. "Why, my pah never waters stock until he goes down town in the city, 'bout 10 or 11."

The Detroit Times says: The influence of the Cleveland-Butler combination was felt in most of the congressional and legislative contests and in many of the struggles over county officers, and it was an influence not to be despised. Many democratic officers-elect would have been defeated had it not been for the aid of their greenback supporters; and, of course, a number of greenbackers owe their election to democratic votes added to those of their own fellow partisans. In short, the terms of the combination were faithfully carried out by the combining parties; and the spirit of the combination on state officers and electors worked upon divers district and county conventions and produced unions of efforts which were more successful, though no more hearty and sincere, than the main one arranged at Ben Butler's suggestion. Disappointed politicians may "kick," but such are the facts.

The New York World says: Some disappointment probably awaits those persons who expect a wholesale displacement under Governor Cleveland's Administration of present office-holders and clerks in the Government service. So far as the Civil Service law extends it is mandatory, and it must either be obeyed or repealed. According to its provisions all persons who seek clerkships in Government offices where as many as fifty persons are employed must pass an examination at the hands of the various boards constituted for that purpose. This rule applies to all the departments at Washington and to the Post-offices and Custom-houses in the larger cities. More than that, clerks who hold positions under Civil Service rules can not be discharged without cause, and it is not a sufficient cause that other people seek the places they hold. Doubtless there will be many changes under President Cleveland's Administration, but probably nothing like the number commonly expected.

How Things Have Changed.

The Minneapolis Journal records the prophecy that the year 1885 will inaugurate a period of expansion and consequent boom in business that is likely to continue at least for several years, and it charges the present hard times to the remorseless contraction of Republican policy that has been going on for several years past in the rapid calling in of the bonds and the liquidation of the national debt. But the most important item in the argument of the Journal is this:

We have an idea that the policy of the incoming administration of Grover Cleveland will be to reverse, as far as possible, the financial policy of the preceding administrations in the matter of contradiction. A stop will be put to debt paying so far as possible. As few calls will be made for bonds as can be done under the discretion allowed by the law. The heavy surplus in the treasury will be paid out in some manner and circulated among the people. Inflation, so far as the administration can influence it—and it can do a great deal—will take the place of contraction. As soon as money begins to circulate more freely, business will begin to pick up. Goods will begin to move. Trade will revive. A demand for manufactured goods will cause the manufacturing establishments to reopen and to run on full time. In short, a business boom will set in.

The most interesting fact in the foregoing is that previous to the late snow storm on the 4th ult. the Journal, in common with many other papers, argued that the election of Blaine was necessary as a guarantee of good times and the future of business stability.

The coming holidays will be more generally observed than any for many years, and we would remind our readers that a bottle of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup will prove a most acceptable present.

C. A. Sharp is rusticating in Ohio.

The masons elect officers for the coming year on Friday, Dec. 26.

Mrs. C. Patterson returned to her home in this village from Cleveland yesterday.

You can hello! with the Patterson House now, a telephone being placed in there last Tuesday.

Our old furniture dealer, Wm. McCowen has a new proclamation in today's HERALD. Read it.

Hough & Hosmer have a change of card this week announcing their big stock of holiday presents.

J. S. Kinney also is expecting his share of the holiday trade, and tells our readers elsewhere what he can do.

Harley & Co., the leading hatters and furriers of Toledo, have a card in this week's HERALD which will repay perusal.

Geo. Smith saved a little boy by the name of Saxton from drowning in the Brownville pond last week. George should be presented with a medal.

Mary Ellen Chase says there will be three women to one man in Heaven. We are delighted to hear it; no one appreciates the society of the dear creatures more than we do.

Fred. Eaton & Co., of Toledo, have a new card in to-days HERALD, which it will pay to read. This firm has an immense trade and four large stores filled with goods. It is a good place to find bargains.

W. D. Adams has his Novelty store packed with goods for the holiday trade, and makes his formal announcement of the fact in this week's HERALD. It is claimed that old Santa Claus has a business interest in the Novelty store.

White Cleveland paid his subscription to the HERALD last Tuesday. There is nothing very remarkable about that, as White always pays in advance, but this is the fourth year in succession that he has paid for the paper on the 9th of Dec., and this circumstance is worthy of record.

When you go to Toledo, stop at the Burnett House. A gentlemanly landlord, commodious rooms, first-class cuisine, clean beds and polite attendants make a combination for a model public house, and the Burnett has all of these. Besides, their prices are fixed to meet the hard times. Try the Burnett.

The Masquerade at the skating rink last Tuesday evening drew a good crowd of both skaters and spectators. There were 85 maskers and 125 skaters on the floor after unmasking. The grand march was led by Will Eccles and Hannah Heesen who kept the procession in order. It would be useless to attempt to describe the different costumes some of which were decidedly fantastic. The spectators all enjoyed the sport.

The new landlord of "The Patterson" is busily engaged this week putting things to rights and settling the rooms ready for business. The Hotel now begins to assume shape and it will certainly be a very tasty and convenient edifice for a public house. It has an elegant office, reading room, a large and well lighted dining room, a splendid kitchen, lots of cellar room, while the chambers are all roomy and convenient of access. The new portion of the building has been finished in hard oil with wall decorations, and a good share of the old building has been treated in the same manner. Mr. Delano will serve his first meal next Sabbath by a Sunday dinner and will open the House to the public next Monday.

THE TECUMSEH HERALD,

TECUMSEH, MICH., DEC. 11, 1884.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL.

Milan's citizens are holding meetings looking to the incorporation of that village.

Township Treasurer Tribon received about one thousand dollars of the taxes last Friday.

Whenever you hear an evil report of your neighbor let it be locked up in your breast, don't repeat it.

Read over the prospectuses to be found in other columns of the paper. Something for every one will be found therein.

It is generally conceded that Adamson has the finest jewelry store and the largest stock ever brought to Tecumseh.

Don't get mad when you thoughtlessly leave a door open and some one asks you if you were brought up in a saw mill.

Adrian Record: Stacy of the Tecumseh Herald, desires "the gift of ubiquity." He wants to gobble up two dinners at once.

Miss Lizzie Smith who has been visiting relatives for the past few months at Sterling, Ill., returned to her home in this village on Friday last.

Johny Trann was in Tecumseh over Sunday. There must be some other attraction here than selling oil to bring John here so often on the Sabbath day.

W. H. Passmore arrived here Friday and remained over Sunday looking over matters connected with the Lilley House. He reports himself well pleased with his new home at Beloit, Wisconsin.

Hard times strike every body these days. Even the doctors are effected. At least we judge so from the fact that one of our physicians has so little business to draw his attention that he spends his time searching the records to ascertain whether the other Tecumseh physicians, like himself, have any mortgages on their property.

The Michigan Farmer is no doubt the best agricultural paper for a Michigan farmer to take. If he takes but one rural paper, he should not hesitate a moment in his choice. The paper has always been an admirable farm journal under its present management, and it is better this year than ever. Clubbed with the HERALD.

Adrian Record: The following passage in the testimony of a divorce case is given verbatim, and caused an audible smile on the face of Judge Howell last Saturday. The mother-in-law testified: "He put me and my daughter out of the house and told us to go to h—l; and so we went up to our house." The judge ordered a decree in the case.

The Redpath Concert was given Saturday to a good audience, and one which was thoroughly pleased with the entertainment. The concert was first class in every respect, and nearly every selection was favored with an encore. If the remaining entertainments of the Library Course shall equal this one, they will deserve and ought to receive a liberal patronage.

Evans' Business College, Adrian, is unusually full for this season of year. The special attractions for the student is D. C. Hardy's lightning Short Hand, and Type writing. Also $200,000 in Currency to be used by students in actual business illustrating Banking, Rail Roading &c. &c. Business Scholorships, $30, and the time of the student not limited. Send for Specimens.

Capt. Foster has purchased of W. H. Passmore the lease and good-will of the Lilley House and is now sole landlord and proprietor of the House. Since Mr. Passmore's removal to Beloit, Wis., Capt. Foster has been the practical manager of the House consequently there will be no change. It is no flattery to the new proprietor to say that Tecumseh never had a better landlord. The Lilley House, under his stewardship, will keep the high reputation it has hitherto enjoyed.

A. D. Lawrence has lately been putting the finishing touches on his new residence on Chicago street, and it is now practically completed.—Among the fine residences built in Tecumseh during the past year, it is one of the best. The exterior presents a most attractive appearance and the interior is finished to correspond. The first floor contains a vestibule, parlor, sitting room, dining room, kitchen and bath-room, and the second floor three large chambers and a track room. The kitchen conveniences must have been planned by Mrs. Lawrence, for there is nothing to be added in that line. The house is heated by one of Dobbin's house furnaces. The exterior is painted drab in various shades which beautifully harmonize and the casings, doors and inside blinds are all dressed in hard oil, which makes a handsome and durable finish. The house is plenty large enough for the family that is to occupy it, and we hope they may live long to enjoy it.

The roller skating fever continues unabated.

Read our announcement for 1885 and club rates in another column.

Mr. J. B. Coller, of Milan, spent a few days last week among his Tecumseh friends.

Willis F. Hood, of Deerfield, is a candidate for deputy oil inspector. Hope he will "get there."

The Rorick cheese factory of Seneca closed last week after the most successful run in the history of the concern.

Ab. Wilson has taken his old place in Clark's grocery store for a few days during the temporary absence of C. A. Sharp.

Dr. A. W. Smith would accept the position of state oil inspector. The Governor-elect could go farther and far worse.

The proprietor of the Petersburg Journal has concluded to buy a new Prouty press, as soon as he can raise money enough to pay the freight. He can get a press on tick, but it takes cash down to meet freight bills.

The first number of the Clinton Local, published by Chas. K. Spafford is on our table. It is a five column folio, well printed and well filled with local news. If the first number is an earnest of what is to follow the new venture certainly ought to succeed.

While in Toledo the other day we dropped in to see Chas. A. Keil who is located in a fine store at 231 Summit Street. We call the attention of our readers to his announcement on the 8th page. He is prepared to offer extra bargains during the holiday season.

Teas now at cost as long as they last. Fine Oolong that have sold for 80cents now to be had for 60 cents. 50c. tea for 40c. 75c. Japan tea at 60c. Genuine English breakfast at 50c. and Gunpowder tea at 70c. Call and see and you will purchase.
W. T. ECCLES.

The Morenci Observer says: "The Bohemian oat men report a great boom in their operations just now, and that all the parties who dealt with them last spring are coming out solidly ahead." They will invest again now, a lot of new gudgeons will bite too, and next fall the whole crowd will get left.

The Detroit Times is pushing ahead under Lloyd Brezee's management. If gratuitous advertising will build up a paper, the Times certainly ought to succeed. Brezee has the sympathy of the HERALD in his fight against the conspiracy against him, with our best wishes for and faith in his ultimate success.

The New York World, under its present management, unquestionably stands at the head of the Democratic press. It is allied to no faction and is the organ of no clique, but is a broad minded, liberal, able and faithful Democratic newspaper. Try the World for one year and see how you like it.

Tecumseh Lodge, No. 59, F. & A. M., is making preparations for a public installation and festival to come off the last week in December. Committees have already been appointed and preliminary work is under way. The exact date has not been fixed upon, but it will be as near St. John's day as circumstances will permit.

Macon Grange, No. 167, will meet in regular session, on Friday, the 19th inst. at 7 o'clock P. M. This will be the last business meeting of the year ending Dec. 31, 1884. The annual election of officers and a board of five directors of Grange Hall association will take place at this meeting.
M. J. MARTIN W. M.

The first meeting of the Union Club since the reorganization will be held in Exelby's Hall, Brittons on Tuesday eve., Dec. 16. Rev. J. W. Kerridge, of Clinton, will address the meeting. His former address was pronounced one of the best talks for temperance to which our people had listened for a long time. It is now fully settled that this question is to be the all absorbing issue of the near future, and is deserving the best attention of all thinking people. Come out and give Bro. Kerridge a good hearing.

The southeastern Michigan, beekeepers association met in Plymouth Church Chapel, Adrian, Dec. 3rd, with about 25 members present. The various questions pertaining to bee culture, such as wintering, overstocking, different races of bees, qualifications of a successful beekeeper, fall brood, care and marketing of honey, etc. were discussed with much interest. The amount of extracted honey reported was 14,000 pounds. Comb honey about 12,000 pounds. Number of colonies reported, spring count, 600.

W. H. Osborne Esq., of Milwaukee, was in town over Sunday. He left home about a week before and had been to Detroit on business, and came out on the Wabash and M. & O. roads Saturday evening. Mr. Osborne is now president and treasurer of the Wisconsin Malleable Iron Co., one of the heaviest manufacturing industries of Milwaukee, an establishment which employs about 200 men. His business has been suffering from the financial depression of the past few months but he looks for a healthy revival of business during the coming year.

John R. Clark delivered his lecture "To and Fro" at Blissfield a few days ago, and the Advance speaks very highly of it.

The Deerfield Star is the name of a new paper. We fear it will prove a fleeting meteor, rather than a fixed star in the Lenawee County constellation.

The two brass bands of Blissfield propose to get up a musical contest. Wouldn't it be a good plan for the Tecumseh bands to get up a musical contest?

A visit to the toy stores, provided you can get through the crowd, will do more to remove all suspicions of the existance of hard times than the most powerful argument.

W. T. Lawrence, the proprietor of the Lawrence House at Adrian will spend the winter in California, and during his absense Dwight A. Whitney will take charge of the house.

From the receipts of the last annual fair, the Morenci U. E. & D. P. Association have paid all interest, premiums and expenses incurred, and $600 on the real estate indebtedness.

Last Thursday afternoon Mrs. Henry Smith fell on the sidewalk and broke the bones of her left arm between the elbow and wrist. Dr. Catlin reduced the fracture and she is now doing finely.

D. W. Clark fell upon the sidewalk, last Saturday afternoon and broke a bone of his left ankle. The fracture is not a serious one, but it will keep him quiet for several days. He is now hobbling about on crutches.

Nat Doke has had two happy spells this fall. One was when Cleveland was elected, and the other was last Thursday night when he was informed that he was the father of a nice girl baby weighing eight pounds.

Joe Mellon and L. Gregory will give a dance at Britton's hall, Britton on Wednesday eve., Dec. 31st. Good Music, and bill only $1.00. An oyster supper will be served also, and all who attend can rely on having a good time.

Adrian Record: Deerfield is in a high state of excitement. The usual quiet of society is about to be broken by three startling occurrences—a new store, a new wedding and a new postmaster. Who said Deerfield was a quiet town?

Morenci Observer: The autographic quilt, which the Congregational ladies have been getting up for some time past, has been disposed of and netted the society over a hundred dollars. The report was made at the Wednesday evening social.

We call the attention to the card in another column of Smith's German Olio, a new remedy for rheumatism. P. J. Welling, who has been a great sufferer from this ailment, has been taking this remedy with the best results. Mrs. P. J. Welling is agent for Tecumseh and vicinity.

Money is accumulating in the New York city banks faster than profitable use can be found for it. Happily the general stagnation in business is thought to be about ended. Money has begun to be distributed among the farmers and will soon have the effect of enlivening trade.

Next Saturday and Sunday is quarterly meeting at the Methodist church. Communion on Sunday and reception of members. A historic lecture on Sunday at 7 P. M. by Rev. Wm. J. Campbell, of Adrian, promises to be very interesting. Subject, Bishop Asbury, the first bishop of the Methodist Church.

Tax-payers who reside in what is called Brownville, have for many years dreamed of an iron bridge, with foot-path separated by a substantial railing, and a connecting link of sidewalk north and south. But it's only dreaming. A few days since Uncle Billy Bresie accidently saw a lady trying to reach the bridge from the north hill, and heard her exclaim "Thank Heaven I have only one more River to cross." The next morning he called on Oscar Bills; an hour later and the fat horses, Will Jordan and his partner commenced to engineer, and before night a neat foot-bridge over the gully, and a gravel walk was the result. Jordan says the improvement is a "starter" for the near future, and we continue to dream of an iron bridge.

B. J. Coller's holiday music trade opens up big. He sold two grand upright pianos and six organs within the past five days and received several orders for Christmas. The pianos were sold to Joseph Libbs, Railroad street; and T. W. Vandeburg, Comstock street. Organs to Joseph Stockwell, Dover; Clinton literary society; Chas. Terry, Morenci; Mrs. Grames, Deerfield; J. W. Dawson, Canandaigua; St. Joseph church. The pianos and organs he represents are Chickering, Sohmer, Haines Bros., and Christie & Son, pianos. Estey, Clough & Warren and Cottage organs. Come early and select, as I have just received a lot of new styles.

Special prices will be given to the people of Tecumseh and vicinity during the holidays. I am going to stay in the business, and parties buying of me will have their instruments and machines looked after as heretofore. B. J. COLLER, Adrian.

George Knapp, who has lately moved into the old Philo C. Mills house on Chicago street, is prepared to give lessons on the violin or cornet. See notice among the specials.

Business has been very brisk for the buyers of pork, grain &c. during the past two weeks, and while prices are not so high as in years past, sale can be found for everything at "live and let live" figures.

Will Hauck and Burt Garlinghouse started for the former's home in Pennsylvania yesterday, where Mr Hauck expects to remain this winter. Burt will take in New York city and see "the elephant" there before returning.

The merchant who thinks he is well enough known by the people to warrent him in not advertising, makes a great mistake. The same merchant loses many sales that are captured by his more enterprising neighbor who uses printer's ink.

Detroit News: The Clinton (Lenawee county) Local is a newcomer in the already well-raked-over newspaper field of that blessed country. It is "neat but not gaudy," as the monkey remarked when he painted the cat's tail a sky blue.

Mr. Cleveland will be the youngest man ever elected to the presidency, except General Grant. Franklin Pierce was a few months older on taking the oath, than Mr. Cleveland will be when he assumes the chief magistracy. The president elect was born March 18th, 1837.

Just now it is a weighty question as to whether the goose-bone or corn husking prophets are right. The former hold that in this winter the snow will lie deep on the cold, cold ground, while the latter insists that the green grass will grow all around. Between the two who can decide?

People who use postal notes should understand that there is no more security in sending them in a letter than than there is in sending bills. The Government does not undertake to make good any loss of these notes. They are merely useful in sending fractional parts of a dollar by mail.

The Michigan & Ohio has been provided with a new lunch system, which is becoming very popular. It consists of lunch baskets arranged with complete sets of table service and furniture. The passenger gives his order from a bill of fare to an agent who goes through the cars. The order is sent ahead by telegraph and on arriving at the proper station a basket supplied with the order and necessary service is brought in.

TO AND FRO.

DEAR HERALD:—

As I stand on the shore looking across Traverse Bay, sniffing a Polar breeze, or something resembling it, I send to you a few items to my native heath in the balmy south.

Traverse City is splendidly located and one might traverse far and wide in the great northern regions and fail to find a more complete little City than Traverse. This City is the result of that characteristic, Grip, Grit and Gumption so apparent in new regions. The citizens are justly proud of the State Asylum for the Insane, recently erected here at the cost of nearly a half a million of dollars.

I am on a test trip to prove the truthfulness of the prediction that Temperance Advocacy in the future will be a stench in the nostrils of the best people in the future. This prediction made after a recent political victory is simply an intimidation which of itself is very spooky; there is nothing in it. Starting at Blissfield, Lenawee Co. on Temperance and a popular theme, the best people were there. And in this region where the feeling is bitter, through the chagrin of defeat great crowds of the very best people were there, and stood during the whole of the meeting in Library Hall on Sabbath evening. If all were of the one party charged with being very favorable now to Temperance then I say, the country should rejoice in hope of the future of that party, but it is not so; the good old party will not desert the cause of truth and if they do the cause will go on. Truth, and Temperance is truth, is like Tennyson's gurgling brook.

"Men may come and men may go,
I flow on forever."

Journeying northward we marked how grandly rapid Grand Rapids is developing, not like the beautiful Damascus of the Bible distinguished for its white marble, surrounded by its lovely olive foliage looking like a pearl set on an emerald in the mellow glory of the sunlight; but it is surrounded as a beautiful city of White Brick. Not the least among many shrines of interest is the humble dwelling of Michigan's sweet singer Julia A. Moore. Her rural home embosomed by stately and whispering pines, inspiring her genius with their humming cadence, makes the home eminently helpful to so lofty and prolific a poetess.

Higher yet as the poet sings he pushes forward to Petoskey Cheboygan, Charlevoix and other points north until "We right about face" toward home, to wish you and yours dear HERALD, a merry Christmas and a happy New Year.

Cordially,
JOHN R. CLARK.

AN OPEN LETTER.

To counteract the misrepresentations circulated by B. J. Coller, of Adrian, about the White Sewing Machine, which are continually reported to me from all parts of the county. He makes sales of the New Home frequently by falsely representing that the White is not durable, because it is padded, and stuffed with cotton. The padding consists of two small pieces of rawhide riveted to each end of the shuttle carrier to prevent the shuttle making a noise, which makes it the stillest running machine made, and will last, as long as any part of the machine. The stuffing is a small bit of cotton saturated with oil, which the point of the shuttle enters, thus oiling itself. Mayer, Strouse, & Co., of New Haven, Conn., one of the most extensive corset manufacturers in the United States, certify that they have in use 500 White Machines, running 1000 revolutions per minute, and find them the cheapest machines to keep in repair of any they ever had during an experience of 18 years in the corset business. This is the severest test to which a machine can be put. I assert without fear of honest contradiction that no other machine will outlast the White. The popularity of the White is a great drawback to my very honorable competitor, who vainly imagines that he can overcome it by misrepresentation.

To those who contemplate buying a New Home I will give a pointer. Take off the plate back of the arm; and you will see that like the Singer it is constructed with a gearing or cog-wheels. The least obstruction of any hard substance, or flaw in the iron, will cause the cogs to break. For the proof of this I refer you to Messrs Deuel and Welling as to the number they have repaired. Any machine constructed on this plan is not first-class. Ask any competent machinist.

I will say in conclusion to my patrons and the "people of Tecumseh and vicinity that during the holidays I will give them special prices" which will discount B. J. Coller on anything in the music line. Please get his prices before calling. I respectfully invite you to call and examine the improved White Sewing Machine before buying any other. It is the stillest, lightest-running, and equal to any machine made for durability.

Athlophoros

ATHLOPHOROS is a novel word to most people who speak the English language. The Greeks used it centuries ago, meaning to be "THE PRICE-BEARER."

ATHLOPHOROS is the first and only medicine which has carried off the prize as the perfect remedy for Rheumatism and Neuralgia.

The two relentless tyrants they have for now long their suffering victims in an iron grip. Thousands of sufferers have been as slaves to them for years. Their agonies are ended.

ATHLOPHOROS has entered the arena, engaged in a fight with the monsters, and won the victory. As the conqueror in the Olympian games of old was crowned only by the best athletes of ancient Greece, so ATHLOPHOROS has won the prize of all the remedies ever made, and be crowned as the conqueror over rheumatism, who defies all the agonizing agonies of Rheumatism and Neuralgia.

ATHLOPHOROS is a novelty, not only in name, but in its elements. It is unlike any preparation yet introduced.

ATHLOPHOROS is not the best of remedies. It is the only one that has the power to expel from the blood the poisonous acids that are the cause of the disease.

ATHLOPHOROS puts up with no compromise. It does not say it may possibly help some people, it does not say it will cure some, it says it will cure all who use it according to directions.

Are you willing to suffer on and on? or do you want to be well?

"Athlophoros" WILL Cure You

If your druggist does not get ATHLOPHOROS of your druggist, we will send it express prepaid on receipt of regular price, $1.00 per bottle. We prefer you should buy it from your druggist, but if he does not keep it, be persuaded to try something good, and address Dupuis as directed.

ATHLOPHOROS CO., 112 WALL ST., NEW YORK.

A MARVELOUS STORY

TOLD IN TWO LETTERS.

FROM THE SON: "23 Cedar St., New York, Oct. 28, 1882. Gentlemen—My father resides at Glover, Vt. He has been a great sufferer from Scrofula, and the inclosed letter will tell you what a marvelous effect has had in his case. I think his blood must have contained the humor for at least ten years; but it did not show, except in the form of a scrofulous sore on the wrist, until about five years ago. From a few specks which appeared at that time, it gradually spread so as to cover his entire body. I assure you he was terribly afflicted, and an object of pity, when he began using your medicine. Now, there are few men of his age who enjoy as good health as he has. I could easily name fifty persons who would testify to the facts in his case.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

Yours truly, W. M. PHELPS."

FROM THE FATHER: "It is both a pleasure and a duty for me to state to you the benefit I have derived from the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Six months ago I was completely covered with a terrible humor and scrofulous sores. The humor caused an incessant and intolerable itching, and the skin cracked so as to cause the blood to flow in many places whenever I moved. My sufferings were great, and my life a burden. I commenced the use of the SARSAPARILLA in April last, and have used it regularly since that time. My condition began to improve at once. The sores healed all healed, and I feel perfectly well in every respect—being now able to do a good day's work, although 73 years of age. Many inquire what has wrought such a cure in my case, and I tell them as I have here tried to tell you, AYER'S SARSAPARILLA. Glover, Vt., Oct. 31, [illegible] Yours [illegible]

HIRAM [illegible]."

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA cures Scrofula and all Scrofulous Complaints, Erysipelas, Eczema, Ringworm, Blotches, Pimples, Boils, Tumors, and Eruptions of the Skin. It clears the blood of all impurities, aids digestion, stimulates the action of the bowels, and thus restores vitality and strengthens the whole system.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS.

The United States Supreme Court Decides Fifty Cents "Head Money" Must be Paid on all Passengers.

Commissioners Appointed to Examine 242 Miles of the Southern Pacific—Back Pay to "Regulars" in the Mexican War.

"HEAD MONEY CASES."

WASHINGTON, December 8.—A decision was rendered by the Supreme Court yesterday in the so-called "Head Money Cases," sustaining the validity of the statute requiring the master, owner or consignee of every vessel arriving from a foreign port to pay the sum of fifty cents for every passenger brought into a port of the United States, who is not a citizen, such sums to be used for the benefit and care of the immigrants and for the regulation of immigration.

General Foster, United States Minister at Madrid, arrived here yesterday, and in the afternoon submitted to the Secretary of State a copy of the Spanish-American treaty relating to trade between the United States, Cuba and Porto Rico.

The President has appointed W. W. Burhans, General Southern Manager of the United Press at Washington; O. O. Stealey, Washington correspondent of the Louisville Courier-Journal, a Commission to examine and report upon the 242 miles of road recently completed on the line of the Southern Pacific Railroad, of California, between Needles and Yuma, Cal. The completion of this piece of road furnishes another outlet to the Pacific coast by the Atlantic & Pacific road, thus making four trans-continental routes in operation between the Mississippi River and the Pacific coast.

The United States Supreme Court yesterday decided that "regulars" in the Mexican war are entitled to the three months' extra pay granted by act of Congress to volunteers in that war.

The Senate, in executive session, confirmed the following nominations: Thomas O. Osborne, of Illinois, to be Minister Resident and Consul General of the United States to the Argentine Republic; Jehu Baker, of Illinois, to be Minister Resident and Consul General of the United States to Venezuela; Willard P. Tyndel, of Ohio, to be agent of the United States to the States of the Congo Association; Otis P. G. Clarke, of Rhode Island, to be Commissioner of Pensions; Calvin B. Walker, of Indiana, to be First Deputy Commissioner of Pensions; Noah P. Loveridge, of Michigan, to be Second Deputy Commissioner of Pensions.

A THIEVING SET.

A Policeman, Alderman and Several Prominent Citizens of East St. Louis Accused of Robbing the City Clerk's Office.

ST. LOUIS, December 9.—A detective arrived from Springfield, Mo., yesterday, with his prisoner, Charley Clark alias Coleman, the safe-blower, from Chicago. Clark has made a written confession concerning the robbery last May of the City Clerk's office in East St. Louis, in which he details how he and Captain Duffy broke open the vault and stole some $3,000. Duffy was a Lieutenant of Police in East St. Louis at the time, and on the night of the robbery sent the patrolmen of that beat to another part of the city. The same night $10,000 in city scrip was stolen from the vault and although Clark in his written confession denies that he and Duffy got it, he admits as much in his first statement of the matter and implicated an East St. Louis Alderman and two city officials, one of them being one of the most prominent persons of the city.

The story is out, and it seems to be pretty generally believed in East St. Louis that these three officials planned the robbery and that Clark and Duffy executed it. The stub-book containing the numbers of the scrip was also lost in some mysterious manner, so that it was almost impossible to trace up the stolen scrip. Clark says it was sold to a broker on this side of the river, but that he got none of the money. A private railroad detective suspected the East St. Louis officials of St. Louis after the robbery and hired this same Clark, who he knew to be a burglar, to work up the case and find out who the officials were. Clark went over the river and pretended to be working in the matter, but Duffy saw danger in his presence and induced him to leave town. Then the railroad officials began to suspect that Clark was mixed up in it too, and so it turned out. Duffy was arrested Sunday night and it is thought more arrests will follow. Duffy denies the robbery but says that if he goes under several others in good standing will have to go too, but so far he has given no names.

Held for Forging the Pedigrees of Imported Clydesdale Horses.

CHICAGO, December 9.—In the extradition proceedings against Joseph Roeside, of Waukegan, Ill., the noted horse importer, charged with forging the pedigrees of Clydesdale horses imported from Scotland, United States Commissioner Hoyne yesterday afternoon decided to commit the defendant to the county jail without bail to await the action of the Federal executive in the case. The papers will be sent to the Secretary of State to-day. The case has created great interest on both sides of the Atlantic and the Secretary of the English Clydesdale Association was present to push the prosecution.

Death of a Well-Known Divine.

NEW YORK, December 9.—Rev. David M. Halliday, brother of Assistant Pastor S. B. Halliday, of Plymouth Church, died at the latter's residence in Brooklyn, yesterday, aged seventy-seven years. He was graduated from Princeton in 1824. Ill health has prevented him from engaging in pastoral labors for the past eighteen years. During the period of his activity he was widely known in the Presbyterian ministry.

Ghouls Foiled.

NEWTON, N. J., December 9.—The grave of Zachariah H. Price, in the Frankford Plains Cemetery, was opened Sunday night and the casket broken, but before the body could be removed the desecrators were frightened away. Price was a very prominent man in this part of the State, and the object of the ghouls was probably to hold the body for a ransom.

SOUTHINGTON, Conn., December 9.—The president of the Peck, Stow & Wilcox Company intends to cut down his own salary $1,000 per year, to take place January 1, 1885.

Great consternation is manifested in the state of New York, by the manufacturers of Baking Powders. The most important of the three is made by the great manufacturers of Saleratus and soda at Fairport, N. Y., and called DeLand's Chemical Baking Powder. Your grocer has it.

FOUR POINTS Prepared by an entirely NEW METHOD. Composed of the PUREST MATERIALS. WILL NOT INJURE THE FABRIC. WILL CLEANSE WITHOUT RUBBING.

You can do a large washing without any rubbing—use the boiling process instead. You can save Time, Labor, Fuel, Soap and Clothing.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.

Cut up fine and dissolve one half bar in half gallon of hot water. Pour half this dissolved soap into a tub with just sufficient hot water to cover a boiler full of clothes. Then put the clothes in to soak, rubbing plenty of soap in the most soiled parts. Be sure that the water is hot; soak the clothes half an hour; stir them occasionally so that they may get the full benefit of the hot suds; pour the remainder of the dissolved soap into the boiler, adding sufficient water to cover the clothes; wring them lightly out of the suds. Soap the stained spots and place loosely in the boiler; boil forty-five minutes, rinse well, blue and hang to dry. Do not crowd the boiler too full. The same boiling water may be used for another boiling by adding a little soap to each boiler-full of clothes. Flannels and prints should not be boiled, only a little rubbing required after soaking. This soap will cleanse clothing as thoroughly as any other without the use of the boiler. We prefer and recommend the boiling process as in itself a cleansing process, saving labor, the wear of the wash-board, and being the best disinfectent known, it is easier to boil the dirt out than to rub it out. You can cleanse perfectly the finest fabric without injury, the finest point lace and lace curtains. Soak point lace in hot suds made with this soap, press water out with a board between the folds of a towel, roll in a dry towel, and iron between pieces of old flannel. Soak curtains in 10 to 30 minutes and boil 5 to 8 minutes, rinse, stretch on frame, or pin every scallop to carpet over a sheet to dry; no ironing required.

Be sure and ask for ELECTRIC-LIGHT SOAP, and take no other.

Sold by leading wholesale and retail grocers everywhere. Dealers may obtain our goods upon application. ELECTRIC SOAP MANUFACTURING Co., Indianapolis, Ind., and 26-28 South Water St., Chicago, Ill.

CATARRH IN THE HEAD

TRADE MARK.

Can positively be cured by using DR. P. HALL'S CATARRH REMEDY. A new compound, entirely different from all other preparations. It is in the form of a fine ointment which is easily applied in the nostrils and ears, and reaches the seat of the disease by absorption. Pleasant to the smell, and most efficient in operation. For Hay Fever, also impaired Hearing, Sight, Smell and Taste, produced by Catarrhal disease, it is a positive cure. The most noted Physicians and prominent Druggists all over the land have given it their endorsement. THE HARLEM RAILROAD.

Valuable Suggestion of Interest to Men Employed on all Railroads—Read it if You Would be Benefitted.

No man is better known along the line of the Harlem R. R. than Conductor Trowbridge. He writes as follows:

CONDUCTOR'S ROOM, HARLEM DEPOT.
NEW YORK, Feb. 1884.

Dear Sir—I take pleasure in saying a word for Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. I have used it for two years for dyspepsia and derangement of the liver, and can say with emphasis that it always affords prompt and complete relief. Favorite Remedy is pleasant to the taste, thorough in its effects, never producing the slightest disagreeable or sickening sensation. Yours truly,

B. C. TROWBRIDGE.

But Mr. Trowbridge is not alone in his praise of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. Favorite Remedy is a positive cure for malaria as well as indigestion. Read the following from R. A. Campbell, foreman of the sorting room in the Montgomery paper mill:

MONTGOMERY, Orange Co., N.Y., Mar. 4, '84.
Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

Dear Sir:—I have used for some time your valuable medicine, Favorite Remedy, for malaria, and it has proved an effectual cure. After having tried a great many other medicines for a disorder of this kind without avail, I find Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy affords complete satisfaction, and I do heartily recommend it to all who suffer as I did. R. A. CAMPBELL.

Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is a positive cure for malaria, kidney and liver diseases, and for all those ills peculiar to women.

FEATHERS AND BIRD SKINS.

Where the Ostrich, Osprey, Parrot, and Other Feathers of the Trade Come From.

The monthly sale of feathers and bird skins took place at the London Commercial Sale Room, Mincing Lane. To this great center flock buyers of every nationality, for it is the mart of the whole civilized world, and an examination of the stock here exhibited for sale gives a comprehensive idea of what the millinery of the opening season is likely to be in the particular of feathers. Seeing that 376 cases of ostrich feathers and 137,486 birds were disposed of during two of the days of sale, it may reasonably be predicted that for the present at least feathers will continue to be worn in profusion.

The ostrich feathers, which came almost exclusively from South Africa, arrived in their natural state, simply divided into bundles, according to color, length and quality, those from the male bird being either a pure white or black, or a mixture of both, while those of the female are of a uniform drab hue, though in different shades. The peculiarity of color applies to the "boos," or short tail-feathers, and also to the body feathers, the quality of a feather being determined by the size, the firmness of the quill, and the length and richness of the fibres.

There is a very marked difference between the feathers of the birds reared in farms at the Cape and those of the wild ostrich found in the deserts of Egypt; the latter are not so uniformly handsome, the general characteristic being the length and strength of the quill rather than richness and delicacy of fiber. Nevertheless, among the two cargoes brought by the Nepaul and Paramatta there were some magnificent specimens of the wild variety, prodigiously long and thick, being cast by the bird when grown to their full size, instead of being cut at regular intervals, like those reared for commercial purposes.

Osprey-feathers, which are now so largely used in making aigrettes, were conspicuous, but not over-plentiful. Those delicate feather-sprays are a certain extraneous growth from the wing of the Bala buzzard (a species of sea-falcon or eagle). In the natural state they are of a light yellowish brown or snowy white, but are to be procured made up in every shade under the sun. The silky-pointed neck-feathers of the heron, and the soft white plumage that comes from beneath the wings of the African marabou and the Indian adjutant crane, were in great request, as forming an indispensable article of feminine adornment, but the quantities shown were by no means considerable.

If we may judge by the numerous bales of small feathers, principally from the body of the peacock, the rage for feather trimmings is scarcely yet on the wane. All the cases containing these small, fluffy feathers, or "mixed plumage" as they are styled, are destined for the gay capital, and will doubtless reappear in the London market shortly in a new guise as Nouveautes de Paris, having been dressed and made up in the latest mode that fashion dictates.

To specify minutely the number of birds which are imported from Calcutta each month in seemingly inhaustible quantities would simply be to catalogue the denizens of an Indian jungle. It is somewhat perplexing, however, to conjecture what will be done with 44,811 green parrots, even supposing them distributed over two continents; but probably many will be dyed a less vivid color, for it is by no means a modiste's greatest ambition to be true to nature, and an art that admits of blue roses and dog-daisies will readily receive parrots of unknown hues.

It may also be remembered that a large quantity are now introduced into fans, hand-screens, etc. It appears that in spite of the decline of asthetic[illegible] there is still a large market for peacocks' feathers, since on Thursday last seventy-five cases were absorbed in various quarters. A large portion of these cases consisted of the complete skin of the bird, but there were also many hundred bundles of tail-feathers, divided into three varieties—eyes, swords, and fish tails, the last having the appearance of an ordinary feather with the eye cut out, while the swords are those brilliant metallic green feathers which border the tail at each side. There was no lack also of the brilliant blue neck skins, while many cases were filled with wings and body feathers. Other large birds in prodigious quantities were the impeyan and argus pheasants, which could be reckoned by tens of thousands—the former a handsome bird, somewhat larger than an ordinary pheasant, of dark, metallic plumage; the latter, as its name betokens, being covered with white spots or eyes. A small patch of intense red on the breast of the argus pheasant is used solely for the purpose of making flies for salmon-fishing, there being no other feather that can be substituted for this purpose. Of jungle-cocks, which closely resemble our own "brisk chanticleer," there were a goodly quantity, while the various specimens of wood pigeons, doves, quails, partridges, hawks and starlings were sufficiently numerous. Of the tiny humming-bird, considerably over 30,000 have been disposed of in all their glittering variety of ruby, emerald and metallic luster; while numberless small birds of equally radiant and even gaudy plumage, such as the blue-creeper, kingfisher, mantou, golden oriole, jay-tanager and cardinal found a ready market.—London Warehousemen and Draper.

TOLEDO. OHIO.

The Popular Science Monthly, conducted by E. L. and W. J. Youmans, will continue, as heretofore, to supply its readers with the results of the latest investigation and the most valuable thought in the various departments of scientific inquiry. Leaving the dry and technical details of science which are of chief concern to specialists, to the journals devoted to them, the MONTHLY deals with those more general and practical subjects which are of the greatest importance to the public at large. In this work it has achieved a foremost position, and is now the acknowledged organ of progressive scientific ideas in this country. The wide range of its discussions includes, among other topics, the bearing of science upon education; questions relating to the prevention of disease and the improvement of sanitary conditions; subjects of domestic and social economy; the phenomena and laws of the larger social organizations; the subjects of personal and household hygiene, agriculture and the improvement of food products; the study of man; whatever of real advance is made in chemistry, geography, astronomy, physiology, psychology, botany, zoology, paleontology, geology, or such other department as may have been the field of research, is recorded monthly. Special attention is also called to the biographies, with portraits, of representative scientific men. The volumes begin with the May and November number, but subscriptions may begin at any time. Terms, $5.00 per annum. Clubbed with the HERALD, $5.50.

Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine

The opening number for January, 1885, of this favorite magazine is a remarkably brilliant holiday one; most of the articles are timely and appropriate, and are edifying, instructive and entertaining. "The Angel Chimes; a Christmas Story," "The Dominion of Canada," "A Missionary's Letter to the Youngsters at Home," "Glances at Bible History—No. 1: From the Creation to the Dispersion," and "Religious Art in the Greek Church," are finely illustrated and replete with interest. "Representative Religious Journalists" is a new feature: the Rev. Dr. Errett, of the Christian Standard, is the first sketch, with portrait. In the "Home pulpit" is a sermon by Dr. Talmage, the editor, who has also a characteristic article, "The Drink Evil." Among the portraits are those of the Rt. Rev. Samuel Seabury the first American Bishop, and of Rev. Dr. Paret, recently elected bishop of Maryland—the earliest and latest of American Bishops. The price is 25 cents a number, or $2.50 a year, postpaid. Mrs. Frank Leslie, publisher, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, N. Y.

Rural Home remainder this year Free. Our friends ought to consider with care, and promptly accept, the offer made in another column under which THE RURAL HOME can now be had until January 1st., 1885 together with this journal, for one year, for only $2.00. It is the most liberal club combination ever announced by responsible publishers, so far as we are aware. We present it as a special inducement to secure new cash-in-advance subscribers for our own paper, and as a real benefaction to farmers and village folk who desire a thoroughly excellent, reliable and pure farm and family weekly, replete with good reading for every one in the home circle. There is no better edited, winsome and more worthy paper, among scores of valuable ones, than this with which our fortunate arrangement has been made. It has been edited and published by the same men since 1870, and has hosts of friends where longest read.

We take pleasure in calling attention to the advertisement of the RURAL NEW-YORKER in another column. It is a wide-awake farmer's paper, owned and edited by live, practical working farmers, who own and farm 380 acres experimentally. On this all new things are carefully tested, and the results faithfully reported in the Rural. Really new and valuable seeds are selected from those tested, and annually from six to eight kinds are given free to its subscribers. In this way it has done much to benefit the farmers and advance their interests. Our only wonder is that everybody does not take the Rural and share in these good things.

"Indian Department," Washington. I am anxious to introduce Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup among the Indians, having used it myself for several months, and think it one of the finest remedies I have ever found. I assure you it is the only thing that ever relieved me of a protracted cough brought on by exposure while on the Sioux commission last year. A. Boone, Agent for Poncas and U. S. Com.

The attention of our readers is solicited for the card of the TOLEDO WEEKLY BEE, which appears elsewhere in this week's issue. The publishers of the "BEE" offer their weekly paper to all subscribers who send in their orders previous to the first day of January, 1885, for one year, for the small sum of fifty cents per copy, with an extra copy to each club of 20 subscribers. This places a live paper within the reach of all. Try it one year.

DIED.

LAWRENCE—At his residence in this village, on the 5th. inst., Calvin Lawrence, aged 79 years.

The deceased had been a resident of Tecumseh for many years and was formerly engaged in business here. After retiring from business he owned a store here which he rented. He was a man of quiet, unassuming disposition, industrious and frugal in his habits and a good citizen. For the past three or four years he has been in feeble health, and was seldom seen on the streets, keeping himself secluded in the precincts of his quiet home. The funeral was attended at his late residence on Sunday afternoon, by a large gathering. Thus another of the old land marks has been gathered to his fathers. One by one they are passing away.

THE QUIVER.

An Illustrated Magazine, for Sunday and general reading.

AMERICAN EDITION.

Price, 15 cts. monthly, $1.50 per year

Commences with the December number, 1884, will be ready November 15 th.

This Quiver is now published in America for the first time. It is the most popular magazine of its class in the world, and needs but to be known here to be appreciated.

The contributors to The Quiver include one of the best known of this country and Europe. Among them are Hugh Macmillan, D.D., Prof. Blaikie, H. Martin Hart, Dean of Denver; Dr. Bevan, late of the Brick church, New York, Dr. John Stoughton, Lord Brabazon, and many others.

The Quiver is not a sectarian magazine, but appeals to Christian families, no matter what their denomination.

The serial and other stories will be none the less interesting in character and incident because they show the value of sound principle in every department of life; while the papers and lessons for teachers and children, the descriptive topographical papers, the articles on Christian work and enterprise abroad and at home, the records of good deeds done throughout the world, the music and poetry, and the numerous other features which, in a word, combine to make The Quiver what it is and always has been—all these will be maintained in their highest extent and effectiveness, and with the same earnest hope that the work of the future will be as full of real and blessed results as it has been these many past years.

The publishers of The Quiver look for the hearty co-operation of the clergy in their efforts to introduce this magazine into the United States and to the heads of Christian households throughout the land.

The prospectus, giving many details, such as a list of subjects with the name of the author, sent free on application.

The subscription to The Quiver has been placed at the very low price of $1.50 a year, so that every one, no matter what his means, may enjoy its monthly visitations.

MACON MUSIC.

The season of socials, surprise parties, etc., has struck us, and seems to be progressing finely.

Since the last issue of the HERALD came out, we have been wondering whether any old bachelors will get to heaven.

Judging from certain rumors, a temperance crusade might be beneficial.

School is progressing nicely in the Lindsley district under the control of Mr. Clark.

We don't hear so much about civil service reform these days as we did a few weeks ago. "I want the post office" is the kind of reform believed in just now.

The pound social at the residence of Hebron Camburn's on the evening of Dec. 10th was well attended, and hence was very encouraging to the band boys. The next will be at Mr. Ames, in Saline.

School opened this week with Mr. Sudborough as principal and Addie Crittenden as primary teacher. We bespeak for our district a number one school. The board, we think, has exercised considerable wisdom in selecting teachers. We trust that the patrons of the school will uphold and encourage the teachers in their work. Without doing this, success cannot be expected.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

A malignant type of diptheria, has made a little chair vacant in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence, near the planing mill. Death was swift to relieve suffering. Much sympathy is felt for the parents, but it was deemed imperative to prevent if possible, the spreading of a disease that has become our annual scourge, and so but two persons stood by the little grave made but a few hours after life flitted. Why this disease can retain its place among us is a mystery. There are few villages where the rules of cleanliness are kept better, yet sorrow comes to one family and happiness to another, alike without warning.

Mrs. Johnson of Kelly's Corners, is a widow, who owns a loom, a small farm and three children, one of them an invalid. She never can spare the money to buy a nice dress like her neighbors, or time to attend a quilting, yet she can get around lively if any of them are sick, and never waits for an invitation to share their sorrows. Last week Mrs. Kelly and Mrs. North decided that she ought to have a benefit, and all the rest said, yes. This is the way it panned out. Seven men brought seven loads of wood; another 4 bushels of wheat, and 20 more sent word she would hear from them in a similar manner. The ladies made up a purse, and J. D. Sheridan dropped two dollars off the price of a cloak so that a hat, etc., could be bought to match. Then they sailed in with a ready-made supper to finish up the wood-bee surprise. Its a little queer, but Mrs. Johnson looks twenty-five years younger since the prank was played. If such friendly donations to those who are not destitute, can smooth out so many lines of care, what would the effect be on those poverty has mildewed? Its a good time to find out, for the poor are always with us. They are of every nationality and color. Some willful parasites; others made so through prejudice and a lack of self-help education. They are in every town.

The Democrats have sighed for wholesale change in administration; and in no branch is change needed more than in effacing want, laziness, ignorance and the motives to commit crime that are inseparable from them. Supervisor Griswold seemed to have a pain somewhere when the printer told he had done gone and paid four hundred dollars to keep ours alive though not comfortable, just in their normal condition, to receive another yearly dole, as it were. No man need die of heart pang on account of Mr. G's extravagance in charity even if he spends four times that amount in 1885. It will look better in print, besides Mr. Covert asserts that women pay three-fourths of the tax in Columbia. If so, they are mainly responsible for the estimate placed on their generosity by sister towns, for the respectability of a community is rated as much by the unhappiness and degradation it tolerates or condones, as by the number of churches and paying communicants. The woman who objects to having her money used to make others happy, after she has paid it to the tax collector should be made a special concern to the minister. We trust that all supervisors who are the representative almoners from women, will be careful and reflect no discredit on our liberality, but in case their natural timidity prevents their making the near by Christmas and New Year a mirage of memory to the waifs, will they do them the favor or sending them to Woodstock?

The Township Treasurer, Elizah Buck receives taxes at Tipton on Mondays of every week. Taxes are so high, especially the county tax, that some are inclined to think a big steal has been perpetrated at the county seat this year, but we can't see how that could be without Stearns of the Press getting onto it, unless it may be he has been so much occupied with election matters that he had no time to look after home affairs.

Wanted.—An agent to take charge of the Tipton Depot. Must give good reference as to previous condition and ability. Apply at the ticket office.

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

The Fair of the Episcopal church was well patronized. The sales were quite large and good prices were obtained. We were glad to see so many of the good people of Tecumseh at the fair and the more so as they patronized the fair and also gave a very hearty support to the supper. The entertainment in the evening was all we predicted. The drama Rebecca's Triumph was well rendered and was greeted with hearty applause. In short the fair and all else connected therewith was a success in every way and reflects a good deal of credit upon those having it in charge. Receipts of the fair, supper and entertainment $200.00.

Remember, you Tecumseh boys, that Dan will get up a dish of Oysters in a way that will tickle the palate of an epicure.

HALL'S Vegetable Sicilian HAIR RENEWER

was the first preparation perfectly adapted to cure diseases of the scalp, and the first successful restorer of hair to its natural color, growth, and [illegible]. It has had many imitators, but none have fully met all the requirements for the proper treatment of the hair as HALL'S HAIR RENEWER has, and it still stands in front, and spread it into an unknown extent to every quarter of the globe. Its great success can be attributed to but one cause, the extraordinary merit of the article.

The proprietors have often been surprised at the receipt of orders from [illegible] countries, where they had never made an effort to introduce it.

The use for a short time of HALL'S HAIR RENEWER wonderfully improves the personal appearance. It cleans the scalp from all impurities, cures all humors, fever, and dryness, and thus prevents baldness. It stimulates the weakened glands, and enables them to push forward a new and vigorous growth. The effects of this article are not transient, like those of alcoholic preparations, but remain a long time, which makes its use a matter of economy.

METHODIST CENTENNIAL.

A Paper by Bishop L. H. Holzy—The Conference to Close With a Love Feast on Wednesday.

BALTIMORE, December 16.—The chair of the presiding officer of the Methodist Centennial Conference was filled yesterday morning by Bishop Hood, of the A. M. E. Church. The session opened with the singing of the hymn "For here my rest shall be," after which prayer was offered by Rev. T. N. Hoyle, of Allegheny City, Pa.

The first order of business on the regular programme was the reading of a paper by Bishop L. H. Holzy, of the colored M. E. Church, of Augusta, Ga., on "Methodist Means of Grace." The preaching of the Gospel he considered the most important means of grace; the camp-meeting is another prominent means, and this means of salvation should never be eliminated from Methodism. The reading of the Scriptures is recommended, and prayer is a most formidable weapon, without which victory cannot be hoped for. Fasting and obedience are also a great means of grace. Class-meetings have been in the past useful in obtaining and retaining the grace of God.

Bishop Andrews announced that the Business Committee had thought it desirable to have a love feast as the finale of the session of the Conference on Wednesday next.

Rev. A. S. Hunt, Secretary of the American Bible Society, read a very interesting paper on "The Aim and Character of Methodist Preaching."

General discussion followed for thirty minutes, when the Conference took a recess until three o'clock.

Bishop Ninde, of the M. E. Church, presided at the afternoon session.

Rev. Alson West, of the M. E. Church South, read a paper on "The Doctrinal Unity of Methodism." He said that God has called men to be preachers. They must be nourished in faith and doctrine. Heresy is almost pernicious evil. It is treason against God.

Rev. R. N. Davies, of Illinois, read a paper on "Guards to the Purity of our Doctrinal Teaching."

The session closed with the doxology and benediction by Rev. John Lanahan. Last evening the delegates were tendered a reception by the Methodist ladies of Baltimore at the Academy of Music.

THE HORAN FAMILY POISONING.

A Young Lady Arrested for Poisoning Her Sister with Strychnine.

WHITE WATER, December 16.—An investigation of the mysterious death of Miss Anna Horan, which occurred on the 2d inst., was made by the coroner and jury Saturday. Soon after the death of Miss Horan her sister Nellie was taken seriously ill, and the report was circulated that she had confessed to having poisoned her sister and other members of the family, and then attempted to destroy herself. These, however, were proven to be without foundation, in fact she was prostrated by her sister's sudden death and is [illegible] to leave her home. At the inquest yesterday afternoon the chemist testified that he had found by an analysis that the stomach of the dead girl contained forty-six one-hundredths of a grain of strychnine, which was enough to produce death. The testimony of the intimate friends of Anna failed to give any indication that she intended to take her life by poison, or otherwise. The jury adjourned to the home of Nellie Horan and took her evidence while she was bolstered up on a couch. She admitted that on Tuesday previous to her sister's death she purchased strychnine at the drug store for the purpose of killing mice. The druggist advised her to use rat poison instead but she insisted on strychnine. This she placed in a drawer where it remained until Thursday of the present week, when she delivered the package to the Sheriff as she had received it from the druggist. The purchase of the poison was testified to by the druggist, and other witnesses were examined by the jury without adducing evidence of important bearing to the case. At nine o'clock the jury retired for deliberation, which resulted in a verdict that Anna Horan came to her death by being poisoned by strychnine, and that the jury considered the evidence sufficiently strong to warrant holding Nellie Horan for examination on the charge of administering the poison.

American Church Missionary Society.

PHILADELPHIA, December 16.—The thirty-fifth annual meeting of the American Church Missionary Society was held yesterday afternoon in the Church of the Epiphany. Its work is a National one and appeals to American Christians everywhere. Rev. Dr. Richard Newton was in the chair and conducted the devotional exercises. The report of the Executive Committee, which was read, stated that during the past year the society has carried a preached gospel and the ministration of the sanctuary to our utmost borders on the Pacific coast, to our most northern fields in Dakota and Minnesota, to our central dioceses, as in Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska, to the South in Tennessee, West Virginia and South Carolina, to the silver mines of Nevada and the coal mines of Ohio. The total receipts for the year footed up $[illegible]. A long list of officers were then elected for the ensuing year.

A Brutal Father's Deed.

ALBANY, December 16.—Yesterday afternoon a terrible attempt to murder occurred at Munday's stables in this city. Nicholas Quirk, a peddler, fifty years of age and his son John, were at the stable putting up their horses. The father, for some unknown cause, became angry with his son and scolded him, the boy retorted, when the father becoming enraged seized a pitchfork, and as the boy turned to run threw it at him with all force. The fork struck the boy in the back just above the lungs and probably injuring the spinal column. The wounded boy uttered a cry and fell to the floor. The horse and other parties in the stable who pulled the pitchfork from the boy's body. Quirk was arrested and committed to await the result of his son's injuries. The boy is at the hospital in a dying condition.

Guilty of Murder in the First Degree.

BUFFALO, N. Y., December 16.—The jury in the case of Peter Louis Otto, who brutally murdered his wife on November 14, brought in a verdict last night of guilty of murder in the first degree. The accused showed not the least emotion nor departed from the stolid, apparently unconscious state that has characterized his bearing throughout the trial. He was remanded for sentence.

PITTSBURGH, December 16.—The employes of the Leggett Spring and Axle Company, numbering 300 men, will strike against a ten per cent. reduction. The Solar iron works have ordered a ten per cent reduction in wages to take effect today.

FOUR POINTS

Prepared by an entirely NEW METHOD. Composed of the PUREST MATERIALS. WILL NOT INJURE THE FABRIC. WILL CLEANSE WITHOUT RUBBING.

You can do a large washing without any rubbing, use the boiling process instead. You can save Time, Labor, Fuel, Soap and Clothing.

DIRECTIONS FOR USE.

Cut up fine and dissolve one half bar in half gallon of hot water. Pour half this dissolved soap into a tub with just sufficient hot water to cover a boiler full of clothes. Then put the coarses in to soak, rubbing plenty of soap in the most soiled parts. Be sure that the soaking water is hot; soak the clothes half an hour; stir them occasionally so that they may get the full benefit of the hot suds; pour the remainder of the dissolved soap into the boiler, adding sufficient water to cover the clothes; wring them lightly out of the suds. Soap the stained spots and place loosely in the boiler; boil 15 to 20 minutes, rinse well, blue and hang out to dry. Do not crowd the boiler too full. The same boiling water may be used for further boilings by adding a little soap to each boiler-full of clothes. Flannels and prints should not be boiled, only a little rubbing required after soaking. This soap will cleanse clothing as thoroughly as any other without the use of the boiler. We prefer and recommend the boiling process as it is all a cleansing process, saving labor, the wear of the wash-board, and being the best disinfectant known, it is easier to boil the dirt out than to rub it out. You can cleanse perfectly the finest fabric without injury, the finest point lace and lace curtains. Soak point lace in hot suds made with this soap, press water out with the hand; boil 5 to 5 minutes in clean suds made with this soap, rinse thoroughly, press carefully between the folds of a towel, roll in a dry towel, and iron between pieces of old linen. Soak curtains 15 to 30 minutes and boil 5 to 10 minutes, rinse, stretch on frame, or pin every scallop to correct over a sheet to dry; no ironing required.

Be sure and ask for ELECTRIC-LIGHT SOAP, and take no other.

CONDUCTOR'S ROOM, HARLEM DEPOT.) NEW YORK, Feb. 1884.

Dear Sir—I take pleasure in saying a word for Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. Favorite Remedy is pleasant to the taste, thorough in its effects, never producing the slightest disagreeable or sickening sensation. Yours truly,

TREE PLANTING.

Not Enough Importance Given to the Subject by the Government or by the People.

Although a great deal has been written about tree planting and its relations to the rainfall of a country, still there does not as yet seem to be enough importance given to the subject by the Government or by the people. In many countries and districts which once were celebrated for their fertility, agriculture can not now be carried on at all on account of the diminished rainfall, consequent on denuding the country of forests and bush. For instance, Palestine, the northern shores of the Mediterranean, Greece and parts of Spain. The mountains of Estremadura and Murcia have been stripped of the forests and there is now no rain there for eight or ten months, which forbids agriculture, while Catalonia and Valencia are covered with wood and possess a moist and productive soil. Prof. Lindley observes of Mauritius: "If this island should in time become barren, it will undergo the fate which usually attends the destruction or absence of forest in countries exposed to great solar heat." Blanqui says of the Cape Verde Islands: "The terrible droughts which devastate them must be attributed to the destruction of forests." On the other hand, in South America the appearance of forest on cleared land was followed by a rising of the waters of Lake Tacaragua. Again, Blanqui says: "In St. Helena the wooded surface has extended and the rain has increased in proportion. It is now double what it was during the residence of Napoleon." The same authority says: "In Egypt recent plantations have caused rain. The rainfall in Egypt was as low as twelve inches in a year, but by planting some millions of trees by Mahomet Ali the rainfall has been brought up to forty inches. When the Mormons first settled in Utah they found the district barren; water had to be brought almost incredible distances in wooden pipes; trees were carefully planted and nourished with the water so brought, and now the district may be termed the garden of the world, and is not dependent on water brought a distance, but enjoys a steady rainfall." In Ascension the replanting of a mountain caused a spring which had dried up after felling the wood to flow again with its former abundance, the wood, having been cut down on the sides of the mountain, had dried up the spring at its base. The following is from "Proctor's Light Science": "We may point out in this place the important connection which exists between the rainfall of a country and the amount of forest land. We notice that in parts of America attention is paid with marked good results to the influence of forests in encouraging rainfall. We have here an instance in which cause and effect are interchangeable. Rain encourages the growth of an abundant vegetation, and abundant vegetation in turn aids to produce a state of the superincumbent atmosphere which encourages the precipitation of rain; the consequence is that it is very necessary to check before it is too late the processes which lead to the gradual destruction of forests. If these processes are continued and the climate has become excessively dry, it is almost impossible to remedy the mischief, simply because the want of moisture is destructive to the trees which may be planted to encourage rainfall. Thus, there are few progesses more difficult (as has been found in parts of Spain and elsewhere) than the change of an arid region into a vegetation-covered district. In fact, if the region is one of great extent, the attempt to effect such a change is almost a hopeless one. On the other hand, the contrary process—that is to attempt to change a climate that is too moist into one of less humidity—is in general attended with not much difficulty. A judicious system nearly always leads to the desired result. It appears to be generally believed that trees produce the following effects: They increase the amount of rainfall. This they probably effect thus: They lower the temperature and thus cause the moisture-laden air first to become visible as clouds, and secondly to be precipitated as rain. They intercept, as it were, tap the vapor-charged winds. They supersede the state of tension and polarization which exists when an electrified cloud is above them by silently discharging the electricity. It is well known that a moderate amount of rain falls upon the ocean far away from land, and it may be thought by some that the absence of trees can not reduce the rainfall to an amount less than the fall at sea, which may be considered the normal fall. That from some cause or other a less amount of rain may fall upon land than sea, is evident from the existence of the rainless districts of North Africa, Mexico and Peru. In order to attract rain it has been shown that the surface must be covered with objects like trees, which produce diminution of temperature."—San Francisco Chronicle.

Why Tropical Man is Black.

An interesting communication has been made to Nature by Surgeon-Major Alcock, on the reason why tropical man is black. The eyes of many of the lowest animals are generally to be described by means of patches of pigment which form their most conspicuous element. It is suggested that pigment placed behind a transparent sensory surface, such as the eye, increases the stimulating effect of rays of light. The well-known absorbent power of dull black things for heat, and the increased activity of all living matter under the influence of warmth, are points bearing on this question. In the negro the pigment cells are placed in front of the nerve terminations, and here the black pigment in the skin serves to lessen the intensity of the nerve vibrations that would be caused in a naked human body by exposure to a tropical sun; so that the pigment plays the same part as a piece of smoked glass held between the sun and the eye.

Catarrh.

Is a very prevalent and exceedingly disagreeable disease, liable if neglected, to develop into serious consumption. Being a constitutional disease, it requires a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, acting through the blood, reaches every part of the system, effecting a radical and permanent cure of catarrh in even its most severe forms. Made only by C. I. Hood & Co. Lowell, Mass.

A scientific paper asserts that it is water and not food that makes people fat.

The distressing disease, Salt Rheum, is readily cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla the great blood purifier. Sold by all druggists.

C. A. Wright & Co. state that indigestion prepares every one for disease, but guarantee Acker's Dyspepsia Tablets to cure all forms of indigestion.

Pansylvania loses $22,720,724 annually through suspension of coal mining.

For scrofula, syphilitic disorders, thin and watery blood, sluggish liver indicated by uniary sediments, diseased mucous membrane, indicated by both nasal and uniary catarrh, inflamed eyelids, ect., use Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaprilla. It gradually rebuilds a broken down constitution and restores robust health and strength to every part. No other remedy equals it.

TOLEDO, O.

FARMERS' SOCIAL CLUB.

Dec. 12th, Club met per adjournment at the residence of Mr. George Griswold. Although it was a cold stormy night the attendance was quite large, with several visitors who became members by joining the club, conspicuous among which were Mr. and Mrs. Hurry of Franklin, and Mr. and Mrs. Michael Smelser of Raisin. Also Mr. John Miller, an old resident of Clinton, or rather Tecumseh before the township was divided, was a guest of Mr. Griswold at the time of meeting. The program was good and well carried out, excepting declamation by Artie Hall, who could not attend in consequence of the sickness of his mother. Music by the choir, one of their best efforts; song by Fred Waldron, "The Old Oaken Bucket" carried the old members back to their childhood days. Essay by Clara Waldron, subject "Language" was a good effort and the sentiment brought out is well worthy of a careful perusal and should be well considered by the heads of families, not only of this club, but all others interested in the education of children. Song by Ora and Garland Gillespie, although sung once before at a club meeting, seemed not to lose its interest. Select reading by Mrs. Griswold, a good selection and well read.

The Question—Resolved that it would pay for Farmer's to keep farm accounts, was participated in by nearly all the members present, although there seemed to be but very few if any that had kept strictly what might be called keeping farm accounts.

Mr. Russell opened the discussion, prefacing his remarks by telling how his wife done her washing, which consisted in dissolving three-quarters of a bar of soap in about a gallon of soft water, adding thereto four table spoons full of kerosene. When thoroughly mixed, put in the clothes with water enough to cover well, and boil. Rinse through two waters and hang out to dry. No sweating over the washboard, and if the matron is musically inclined can occupy her time during the boiling, in playing upon the organ or piano.

Mr. Russell thought every farmer should keep a diary of his operations throughout the year, of every day's work, when applied, and a strict account of all his expenditures and income. With such a diary the farmer could tell very nearly at the end of the year what crops cost the most and what paid the best for the outlay.

Mr. Hurry said he had kept a diary of his business ever since he had been farming. Said it was a great satisfaction to look it over and know what he had been doing. Meant to hand it down to his boys so that they could profit by it if they would. Had found often when he had made the largest outlay for the benefit of crops his income was also the largest.

Mr. Rector had kept debit and credit—was most sorry he had done so this year as he was afraid the balance would be on the wrong side of the ledger.

Mr. R. B. Gillespie had kept a strict account of a plat of ten acres sown to wheat, to know the cost per bushel which counting the crop at 20 bus. per acre, and interest on money invested in land, made the cost 75cts. Was sure corn paid the best.

Several others advanced some good ideas, but none had been to the trouble of keeping farm accounts.

A vote was unanimously adopted that Miss Waldron hand in her essay for publication. She kindly consented to do so.

Club adjourned to meet in two weeks at the residence of Mr. John Fisher, Dec. 26th.

PROGRAM.

Essay—Miss Ida Rector.

Declamation—Henry Horton.
Select Reading—Mrs. F. Rector.

Question—Pleasures and Profits of Farming as compared with other pursuits in life. Led by E. L. Russell.

F. V. HORTON, Sec.

The January number of the North American Review is an excellent one. It presents no very famous names among its contributors, but it offers a wide variety of unusually readable articles. We are now so safely over the crisis of the presidential election that men of all parties can consider calmly Bishop Huntington's essay on "Virtuperation in Politics," and it is to be hoped that what they learn from it will not be forgotten four years hence. Under the title "The Reunited South" Henry Watterson presents with great clearness the Southern and Democratic view of the political situation as it now stands. This also is extremely interesting to every citizen, whether he agrees with Mr. Watterson or not. Another question of universal concern which some think will soon make itself a national issue, is that of labor and its compensation; and Col. Hinton, in "American Labor Organizations," shows with what equipment it will take the field.

The fellow, who, by mistake, sent his auburn haired sweetheart instead of a bottle of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup a vial of hair-dye, wants to know the most way to commit suicide.

DePuy roasts coffee at his store and has it on sale. Call and see his fresh roasted and other.

Ten Organs at Coller's.

As the roller skating rinks are very handy for flirtations, we clip the following from an exchange for the benefit of the young people of our village:

One leg in the air means, "Catch me."

Two legs in the air, "Mashed."

Hitting the back of your head with your heals, "I'm gone."

Lying on your back, "Assist me."

One skate in your mouth, "too full for utterance."

A backward flip of the heels and a sudden cohesion of the knees to the floor indicates "A supplicant."

Suddenly placing your legs horizontally on the floor like a letter V indicates, "I am paralyzed."

To pick your teeth with your knees has no reference to the fact that you are off your proper base.

THE WORLD.

31 PARK ROW, NEW YORK.

The CENTURY

IN 1885.

A GREAT ENTERPRISE.

Papers on the Civil War.

The important feature of the Century Magazine for the coming year—indeed, perhaps the most important ever undertaken by the magazine—will be a series of separate papers on the great battles of the war for the Union, written by general officers high in command upon both Federal and the Confederate sides. General Grant, (who writes of Vicksburg, Shiloh and other battles,) Generals Longstreet, McClellan, Beauregard, Rosecrans, Hill, Admiral Porter and others. The series opens in the November Century with a graphically illustrated article on written by the confederate general, G. T. Beauregard. Brief sketches, entitled "Recollections of a Private," papers chronicling special events, descriptions of various auxiliary branches of the service, etc., will supplement the more important series by the various generals.

A strict regard for accuracy will guide the preparation of the illustrations, for which the Century has at its disposal a very large quantity of photographs, drawings, portraits, maps, plans, etc., hitherto unused. The aim is to present in this series, not official reports, but commanding officers' accounts of their plans and operations—interesting personal experiences, which will record leading events of the war, and possess, at the same time, a historical value not easily to be calculated.

Fiction.

In this line The Century will maintain its prestige, and furnish the best stories by American writers that can be procured. In November begins a new novel by W. D. Howells, author of "Venetian Days," "A Modern Instance," etc. This story deals with the rise of an American business man. A novel by Henry James, a novelette by Grace Denio Litchfield, and short stories by "Uncle Remus," Frank R. Stockton, H. H. Boyesen, T. A. Janvier, H. H., Julian Hawthorne, and other equally well-known writers will appear at various times.

Miscellaneous Features.

Under this heading may be included a series of papers on the cities of Italy by W. D. Howells, the illustrations being reproductions of etchings and drawings by Joseph Pennell, a series on the New Northwest, being an interesting group of papers by E. V. Smalley, Lieut. Schwatka, Principal Grant, of Kingston, Ontario, and others, descriptive of little known regions; papers on French and American art—sculpture and painting, with some exquisite illustrations; papers on astronomy, architecture and history, the first being by Professor Langley and others. Under architecture are included more of Mrs Van Rensselaer's articles on churches, city and country houses, etc. Col. Geo. E. Waring Jr., will describe Progress in Sanitary Draining. E. C. Stedman, E. Gosse and others will furnish literary essays. George W. Cable will contribute in various ways; several papers on sport and adventure will soon be published, and John Burroughs will write from time to time on outdoor subjects.

Readers of the century may feel sure of keeping abreast of the times on leading subjects that may properly come within the province of a monthly magazine. Its circulation is now about 140,000 monthly, the November number exceeding that figure. Subscriptions should date from this number, beginning the War series and Mr. Howell's novel. Price $4.00 a year, 35 cents a number. All booksellers and newsdealers sell it and take subscriptions, or remittance may be made to the publishers.

A free specimen copy of the Century will be sent on request. Mention this paper.

ST. NICHOLAS

FOR YOUNG FOLKS.

ATTRACTIONS FOR 1884-85.

No printed periodical can take the place of parent, pastor or school teacher; but a good magazine can supplement their work, and influence to a wonderful degree. In view of this, it is not extravagant to say that "instead of, can we afford to take St. Nicholas?"—the question of every earnest household in English speaking countries to-day, should be

"Can we afford not to take St. Nicholas."

The following are some of the good things already secured for future numbers of St. Nicholas:

"His One Fault," a serial story for boys, by the popular author, J. T. Trowbridge.

"Personally Conducted," illustrate papers on famous places in Europe, by Frank R. Stockton.

"Historic Girls," a companion series to "Historic Boys," by E. S. Brooks.

"Ready for Business," suggestions to boys about to choose an occupation, by G. J. Manson.

"Driven Back to Eden," a serial by E. P. Roe.

"Talks for Young Folks, a series of popular papers by H. H. (Helen Jackson)

"Among the Law-makers," recollections of a boy-page in the U. S. Senate, by Edmund Alton.

"Davy and the Goblin," a very funny serial story by a new writer, Chas. Carryl.

Short Stories by Louisa M. Alcott.

"The Progress of Invention," descriptive papers by Chas. E. Bolton.

"Art Work for Young Folks," papers on decorative handicraft, by Chas. G. Leland.

"Sheep or Silver," a story of Texan Life, by the late Rev. Wm. M. Baker.

"A Garden of Girls," being six short stories for Girls, by six leading writers.

"Tales of two Continents," stories of adventure, by H. H. Boyesen.

"Cartoons for Boys and Girls," funny pictures by St. Nicholas artists.

"From Bach to Wagner," brief pointed biographies of great musicians, by Agatha Tunis.

Special papers by chosen writers.

The illustrations will be the work of the very best artists and engravers, and there will be plenty of them.

The subscription price is $3.00 a year, and now is just the time to subscribe. Single numbers cost 25 cents. Buy the great Christmas number.

A free specimen copy of St. Nicholas will be sent free on request. Mention this paper.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

Cold, congealed caution, at the Commercial, and the house narrowly escaped burning.

W. B. Nickols of Wolf Lake, went into camp in the open field during Tuesday's snow storm, and entered an item of disagreeable experience on a new page of his life ledger. His house was large, new and nice, with plenty of water near, but neighbors were distant, and timbers falling, when his little boy discovered the blaze. The child is but six years old, yet ran a mile without cap or mittens, for help. His new boots were burned as well as most everything else. He sat down to cry and almost froze. He still charges his loss to carelessness; for there were two big men and four eyes to look around with. J. D. Sheridan sent him a pair equally good, but they can never quite replace those only, first. Mr. Smith stretched his house, making it hold five more until Friday, when they were invited to Brooklyn to undergo repairs. Col. King has contributed a suit of clothes for Mr. N., and a donation social will be held at Union Hall, Monday evening. Napoleon people are also expressing substantial sympathy. A home hol-o-caust however small, is a heart lesson not easily forgotten, for we learn of numberless things which we might, could and should have done; and the miss-done are too numerous by half. Imperfect calculation and erroneous administration of our temporal affairs show the infallible strength of human weakness, and would't it be a good plan for those who are hammering divorces to flinders to tell on what grounds they base their demand for such mortal perfection as the irrevocable contract system requires. The reasons for getting married are often so silly or selfish as to hinder a genuine change of name. Just as many unworthy motives prompt some smart people to marry, if their own stories are credited, as muddle any other contract, and if affection is not a paramount factor in the bargain, how do these presumed to be heavenly cases end? In a row, every time, over this way. The zeal, however honest it may be, that finds in Bible history any command to bind the unbearable into such a family bundle, that only death can break the hasp, aims a worse blow at marriage than all the Woodhull's in the world, if he patents it. Few, possessed of common sense, would dare trust themselves in such a merciless trap, for who can be certain of another's future that cannot even guess their own. It sounds awful sacrilegious, but habit governs married infelicity, instead of Heaven. It would destroy nine-tenths of any woman's ability to bear the kaleidescope martyrdom of an every day disenchantment, if debarred the possibility of divorce. I don't know whether the impulse to escape from a hateful association is divine or not, but its part of the nervous system, and tends to hinder this transcendental, indissoluble theory from becoming a brilliant success in any house where fear and aversion predominates, besides a thrall that impels people to kill each other or themselves to gain a brief respite, is tolerably strong, without this extra divine clincher.

Two sleighloads attended the Temperance lecture at Exelby's Hall, Brittons, last week, given by J. M. Kerridge, of Clinton. It being stormy, the attendance was small but the lecture was one of the best. The club will have a lecture every month if good speakers can be had.

The Schubert Male Quartette, of this city, is rapidly winning for itself distinction and appreciation. Its members, Messrs. J. L. Johnson, Homer Stone, John R. Tyler, and George Iott are each admirable solo singers, while collectively their voices harmonize with wonderful perfection. At the Festival Concerts given recently in Dubuque, these gentlemen were a pronounced feature, and gave eminent satisfaction. They have been in constant practice during the past season, and sing now with a precision of attack and finish of phrasing, together with a nicety of shading, which are rarely equalled.—Chicago Saturday Evening Herald.

Adrian is improving. The city now rejoices in the possession of a Chinese laundry man. Heep Seng is his cognomen. Whether he is related to Yee Din, we cannot say, but they look near enough alike to be brothers.

ESSAY.

Delivered before the Farmer's Social Club, December 12, 1884.

It is supposed that these meetings are for the mutual benefit of all who may attend, and those who take part in the exercises, the music, the select reading, the recitations, and especially in the discussions, are expected to furnish either amusement or instruction.

Now, I never could write anything comical, and it is not to be imagined that I could advise these experienced farmers as to the best mode of farming under the new administration. Neither can I direct these skillful housewives in their departments. But, perhaps, each one should write about that which they best understand; if so, a few words regarding a question now agitating our schools may not be out of place; namely, "Language in our schools." Now I do not mean the study of the classics, which once a year furnishes a subject of much discussion at the village school meetings; but the study of Grammer in our country schools, and as applicable to the education of our farmer boys and girls for the farm.

This is a subject which hitherto has been neglected or treated of secondary importance. I said secondary, but that is placing it far too near the front, for the three R's of the old time school, "Reading, Riting and Rithmetic," are in the front ranks.

Now while I believe every farmer should have a liberal education, I think too much attention is given to Arithmetic in preference to other studies. The old fashioned farmer says, my boy must read, write, spell, study Geography if he pleases, and teacher insists on his doing so, but as for Grammar I do not want he should spend his time with it. To the instructors of the school he adds, teach him something practical. Something he will use when out of school. Teach him Arithmetic.

So the child devotes his time to locating the cities of Africa, or in the solution of some problem, involving principles he never will have occasion to use again, while entirely neglecting the principles of his "mother tongue," for he does not believe in Grammar.

With all deference to the opinion of these gentlemen, I should like to ask, how often a farmer uses anything more than the four rudimentary rules, Addition, Substraction, Multiplication, Division, and perhaps a little interest?

While on the other hand, as soon as a child learns to talk he uses language. Henceforth a large part of his waking moments is devoted to this one accomplishment. In whatever form, either orally or in writing, he expresses his thoughts or wishes, it is by language. In the majority, but not all cases, very little attention either at home or in school is paid to his manner of speaking until he begins the study of Grammar. This, if he be forward, is about the age of twelve, usually however nearer fourteen. Now it is expected that no mistakes will occur, no slipping of the tongue, for does he not study Grammar? But should it be thought possible that a few rules of Syntax will overcome the habit of years? This child has all unconsciously to himself and those around him, been contracting a habit, which will cling to him despite his best efforts, for years and perhaps his whole life. By much pains it will seemingly be overcome, only to reappear at some trying moment.

I have heard many well educated people say that they find themselves constantly making Grammatical errors, which slip imperceptibly from the tongue and pen. One of our most noted Presidents, "the self-educated Lincoln," never so far conquered the habits of early years, that he felt like trusting a message to the Senate without first submitting it to a friend for inspection.

A child as soon as he enters school should be corrected for each error. Every class should be a language class. As a certain learned educator has said, "No reason need be given to the pupil only that one form is correct, the other not." But not only in school must this work be done; as one who is with a child for seven hours or perhaps a little over, cannot hope to overbalance the remainder of the twenty-four. It is when a child is at play, or talking free with his associates that the discrepancy of his words will be most plainly noticed.

Hence, a large part of this work necessarily falls on the parents. I recall to mind a child not old enough to attend school, whose language was in every way a model of precision and purity of expression. Her mother was very careful to correct all inaccuracies and as a consequence that child never will have occasion to unlearn the lessons of her childish days. And thus all parents by a little care and watchfulness, can keep their children from acquiring that, which can only prove a source of trouble and annoyance.

If the habit of speaking correctly is formed, precision in writing will follow. A letter may be a model of neatness, the spelling perfect, the writing a gem of art, but a few incorrect expressions will spoil the beauty of it all. Therefore who shall say, that Grammar is not an important study? Teachers have long been aware that a screw is loose in this work; but they are unable to tighten it, until public sentiment undergoes a change and calls for a reform. That that time is slowly coming, there can be no doubt; for already it is noticed in the graded schools; and, it is hoped, will soon find its way into our less changable country schools.

CHRISTMAS.

A world of white that flushes with the smiles of morn;
A gladsome whisper breathing what to earth betell—
The babe—the loving Savior in the manger
born,
And the bell up in the steeple ringing
ding, dong, bell!

A message from the forest clad in key-mail;
A warble from a birdie that he glee must tell;
A rousing crow from far and near the dawn
to hail,
And the bells up in the steeple ringing
ding, dong, bell!

Oh, gentle breath of kindness on the listening ear,
Oh, gleaming sky that weaves its pure and holy spell!
Oh, rippling laugh of childhood waking everywhere
And the bells up in the steeple ringing
ding, dong, bell!

The patter over all the world of little feet,
Ah! rimmed is wintry earth with joy no heart may tell!
And so the year is rounded with delight so sweet,
And the bells up in the steeple ringing
ding, dong, bell!

"A merry, merry Christmas!" pipe the winds
at play;
"A merry, merry Christmas!" echo vale and dell;
"A merry, merry Christmas!" dancing wavelets say,
With the bells up in the steeple ringing
ding, dong, bell!

A CHRISTMAS HEROINE.

A True and Romantic Story Told of a Cincinnati Lady.

The writer of this article was assigned to the task of preparing a Christmas story, and, as Christmas is the same as any other day to the hack reparter, and as the reporter couldn't think of anything about Christmas that would be worth reading, he concluded to demand the aid of one of those persons who are always loaded with a fund of stories relative to the private life of prominent people.

"Come with me," said he, as soon as he learned what was wanted, "and I will give you the material of a story that will not only be interesting, but strictly true."

He led the way to a large and handsome dwelling on a street devoted to residences, occupied by solid merchants and their families. The guide and reporter were admitted by a neat-looking servant, and were ushered into a parlor furnished elegantly. Within five minutes a lady, tastefully but richly attired entered the room and graciously greeted the student of secret history, whom she welcomed in a most cordial but ladylike manner. After the reporter had been introduced the guide had a few moments' conversation relative to a piece of property the lady was about to sell, and this matter disposed of a general conversation on the topics of the day followed, in which the hostess took part with a vivacity and grace at once charming and unaffected. The lady was a great reader and lover of fine arts. Her familiarity with books and authors and men of the times showed that she had improved her mind to a high degree. The paintings in the parlors were all admirably selected. The lady, the reporter learned, had traveled extensively in this country and abroad. She spoke French fluently, and had acquired considerable of the politeness for which the French people are celebrated.

At the end of half an hour s chat the reporter and his friend took their departure.

"You have just left the heroine of your Christmas story," said the guide, as the two strolled down the street.

"I supposed as much," said the reporter, "and now for the story itself."

"And now for the story itself," repeated the guide. "You shall have it. The woman you just saw was once a country girl residing on a farm thirty miles from Milwaukee, Wis. At the age of fourteen years she was a loving, confiding, ingenuous child, the perfect picture of the ideal, rosy-cheeked country maid. One day, when she was in her fifteenth year, a middle-aged bachelor, who was in business in Milwaukee, called at her father's house to buy some horses or something—I've forgotten just what. He saw the little country maiden and was struck by her marvelous beauty, as well as her childish simplicity of manner and sensible mien. He took occasion to converse with the little lass and asked her if she would not like to marry him. The child really did not know the full import of his meaning, but she innocently replied that she would be delighted to marry him. He then told her to be a good girl, and that some day he would come and make her his wife. The gentleman went back to his home in Milwaukee, and the country girl resumed her life of humdrum country existence. Christmas time approached, and on Christmas eve our country maiden proposed to hang up a stocking in anticipation of a present. She was blessed with a step-mother, a woman of vicious temperament and a deep hatred for the little beauty, who was so unfortunate as to be under the same roof with her. The step-mother, always on the lookout for an excuse to have a row, seized upon the simple act of hanging up a stocking on Christmas eve to frame an excuse to treat the poor girl to a most violent whipping. The bright anticipations of the happy Christmas entertained by the girl were thus swept away, and she retired that night with her busy brain on fire, as she immediately determined that she would no longer submit to the cruelties of her brutal step-mother. Suddenly she thought of the gentleman at Milwaukee who had said he would marry her, and instantly she made up her mind to go to him. She had no money, and could not get any but that did not stand in her way. At four o'clock on Christmas morning she packed a few articles of clothing in a handkerchief and set out on foot for Milwaukee. It was a frightful undertaking for a young and tender girl, but she bravely pushed on, and at night she reached the city. She was footsore, cold and tired, but not discouraged, for she never dreamed that she was in danger of being disappointed. Her faith in human nature was something sublime, and her confidence in the gentleman who had said he would marry her was as great as though she had known and trusted him all her life.

"The bachelor sat in his cosy private parlor at his boarding-house, which was the best place of the kind in Milwaukee, on the Christmas evening, when his landlady made her appearance leading our little heroine by the hand.

"As soon as the gentleman could recover from his astonishment at the sight of the suffering child before him, he exclaimed:

"'Why, what in the world are you here for in such a sad plight?'

"'I have come to be married!' was the reply, as the child confidingly approached her lover.

"'To get married?'

"'Yes, sir; to marry you.'

"'Well, well, well,' mused the bachelor, as he led the little wanderer to the fire and stroked her beautiful hair. Then turning to the wondering landlady he commanded her to take the child under her protection and make her comfortable.

"'Yes, come, sissy,' said the landlady, 'you are almost perished with cold and hunger.'

"Her shoes were worn through and her feet were covered with blisters. Yet her cheeks were like a peach and her eyes sparkled with brilliancy. She was most beautiful. The bachelor sat for hours musing. The red cheeks and bright eyes of the little country maid haunted him all night. You may not wonder at this, for if you think the lady you saw to-day is beautiful, what must she have been when a girl?

"Within a few days the gentleman married the girl, and as he was well-to-do they lived together in comfort for several years, when the gentleman died. The young widow remained a widow but a short time, when she remarried. This time she was married to a gentleman who made money, but lived liberally, and entertained his friends right royally. This marriage, as the former, was a happy one, and the lady had opportunities to travel abroad. She learned the French language and indulged in the study of art.

"But one day the lady's husband died suddenly while on his way from Cincinnati to Chicago. Thus a second time your heroine was widowed. She had a magnificent wardrobe, but only about two hundred or three hundred dollars in money left. This money was used up in defraying the expenses of her late husband's funeral and paying their hotel bill. She was then left without means, but she kept up her courage. When on the farm she had been taught to sew, and she concluded to turn this part of her education to advantage. Her desire was to go to housekeeping and take cloaks home to make. She had nothing with which to furnish a house, but she went to a friend of her husband and laid the case before him, requesting a loan and offering a jewel as security. The gentleman kindly consented to lend her what money she wanted without any security, and asked how much she required. She innocently replied that she thought she would need at least twenty dollars. The gentleman laughingly informed her that she could not buy anything with twenty dollars, and that she had better take fifty dollars, which she could repay at her own convenience. But the sum of fifty dollars frightened her, and she would consent to accept but the twenty dollars. Supplied with that amount, she rented a small house and bought the simplest outfit for one room that she could purchase at a second-hand store. She had no trouble in securing cloaks, and as she and an assistant could make two of them in a day, at three dollars apiece, leaving the lady a profit of five dollars a day, she soon paid off her debt of twenty dollars.

"After progressing in this manner for some time the young widow's attention was attracted by an advertisement in a daily paper setting forth the fact that an immense number of soldier coats were in an unfinished state in the hands of the United States Commissary, and that hands were wanted to finish them. The widow attired herself in her best and repaired to the Commissary's office, where she met a Government official, who politely asked her what she would be pleased to have. She somewhat surprised the official when she informed him that she wanted to get work on the unfinished soldier coats; but he ceased to wonder that the elegantly attired and beautiful young lady before him sought employment when she related how death had left her a penniless widow, and how she proposed to make an honest living. Of course she was promised all the work she might want, and that evening an express wagon load of coats was sent to her modest little home. The official found it in the line of his duty to call at the young widow's house to see that the work on the coats was properly commenced, and his gallant heart bled when he witnessed the poverty of such a pretty woman as he found the lone widow to be. In time, he was smitten by her charms, and set his brain to work to devise a plan by which he could relieve the lonely creature without insulting her. At length he said to the lady that he could promise her enough work to pay her at least five hundred dollars, and that he would gladly pay her that amount in advance in order that she might furnish her house in a manner that would be comfortable. The widow declined the offer with a charming grace.

"Christmas Day arrived, and the officer called at the widow's modest cottage. Marching up to the pretty widow he addressed her thus:

"'I made a proposition to you a few days ago, and you saw fit to reject it. Now I have another to make, and I sincerely hope that this time you will not decline. I want you to render my Christmas extremely happy by giving me the right to protect you from the inconveniences of poverty. Be my wife.'

"To be sure he said much more, but it is not necessary to repeat all that he did say or all she said, save to say that a second time she found a husband on Christmas, and again she found herself independent to the world. Her new husband added to his already comfortable fortune before the war ended, and again the lady got to travel through foreign lands and gratify her love for study and the fine arts. She is a widow again, but a rich one. And on Christmas Days she never fails to bestow upon the needy presents that give joy to the recipients and happiness to herself. She looks upon Christmas Day as a day of propitious fruition, and is probably happier on that day than anybody you ever saw."

The above is no fancy sketch, but is a strictly true history of a veritable personage who resides in Cincinnati, and the names are withheld for obvious reasons.—Cincinnati News-Journal.

NOT SATISFIED.

An Arkansaw Gentleman of Color Who Could Not Get No Satisfaction Out of the White Folks.

"I don't want you any longer," said a white man to a colored gentleman. "I have paid you good wages, but how have you shown your gratitude? By stealing my dove-colored pantaloons."

"Who did, boss?"

"You did."

"Who, me?"

"Yes, you."

"It's mighty hard fur er hones' man ter be 'cuzed dat erway."

"But it is mighty easy to accuse a thief."

"Who's er thief?"

"You are."

"Whoi me?"

"Den yer doan wanter hire me no mo'?"

"Den you say I ain't hones?"

"I say that you are a thief."

"Who's er thief?"

"You are."

"Who, me?"

"I am half inclined to have you arrested. The proof that you stole the pantaloons is conclusive. You took them to a second-hand store and sold them for two dollars."

"Wall 'fore de Lawd, jes' heah how dis man do talk. I didn' did nothin' o' de kine."

GROWING FOLK.

A Few Common-Sense Reflections on the Conduct of Life.

It is a mistake to take it for granted, as in books and life we perpetually do, that people must always remain the same. On the contrary, most people are constantly changing—growing, let us hope, but still changing—in character, feelings, opinions. If we took this into account we should often be less harsh to judge; less piteously misjudged ourselves. For instance, we resolve always to love our friend and hate our enemy; but our friend may prove false and our enemy kind and good. What are we then to do? To go on loving and hating as before? I fear we can not. We must accept things as they are, and act accordingly. Or, and this is a common case, we may ourselves once have had certain faults which we afterwards had sense to see and correct, yet those who knew us in our faulty days will never believe this, and go on condemning us forever, which is a little hard. And again, we may have started honestly on a certain course, and declared openly certain opinions or intentions, which we afterward see cause to modify, or even renounce entirely. Time and circumstance have so altered us that we are obliged to give our old selves the lie direct, or else to be untrue to our present selves. In short, we must just retract, in act and word, badly or weakly, nobly or ignobly, as our natures allow. And though we have been perfectly sincere throughout, the chances are that no one will believe us; we shall be stamped as hypocrites, renegades or deep designing schemers, to the end of our days. This, too, is hard: and it takes a strong heart and a clear conscience to bear it.—Miss Mulock.

Ill-Bred Smokers.

There is no one thing, perhaps, in which the difference between the well-bred man and the ill-bred man more appears than in the manner in which, the place where, and the time when they smoke. The well-bred man does not smoke, nor does he seem to smoke to show off; whereas the ill-bred man very often smokes in a self-conscious manner that seems to say: "Look at me! see how skillfully my lips hold this cigar; how I can shift it from one side to the other without touching it with my fingers, and how I can articulate with it in my mouth; in short, look you what perfect control I have over my labial muscles, and, having seen, admire!" In short, there are many low-bred young men—very many—that appear to smoke only to display their imagined grace and skill; when, in fact, in smoking as they do, where they do, and when they do, they but publish their vulgarity. The well-bred man, on the contrary, the gentleman, the man that smokes only for the love of it, puts but as much of his cigar in his mouth as is necessary in order to draw it, keeps it in his mouth no longer than is necessary, and never fails to remove it when he talks or passes any one to whom he would be respectful, especially a lady. Further, our best bred men never smoke in any street at an hour when it is much frequented.—Boston Beacon.

—Alarm is felt in British Columbia at the introduction of opium among the Indians of that Province by the Chinese. Several of the tribes are said to be even more strongly infatuated with the drug than the Chinamen themselves, and will have it at any sacrifice. It is feared that its introduction may lead to serious trouble.

AYER'S Cherry Pectoral.

No other complaints are so insidious in their attack as those affecting the throat and lungs: none so trifled with by the majority of sufferers. The ordinary cough or cold, resulting perhaps from a trifling or unconscious exposure, is often but the beginning of a fatal sickness. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL has well proven its efficacy in a forty years' fight with throat and lung diseases, and should be taken in all cases without delay.

A Terrible Cough Cured.

"In 1857 I took a severe cold, which affected my lungs. I had a terrible cough, and passed many a sleepless night. The disease fastened upon me fast. I tried AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, which relieved my lungs, induced sleep, and afforded me the rest necessary for the recovery of my strength. By a continued use of this PECTORAL a perfect cure was effected. I am now 62 years of age, hale and hearty, and am satisfied your CHERRY PECTORAL saved me.

HORACE FAIRBROTHER."

Rockingham, Vt., July 15, 1882.

Croup.—A Mother's Tribute.

"While in the country last winter my little boy, three years old, was taken ill with croup. It seemed as if he would die from strangulation. One of the family suggested the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL; a bottle of which was always kept in the house. This was tried in small and frequent doses, and to our delight in less than half an hour the little patient was breathing easily. The doctor said that the CHERRY PECTORAL had saved my darling's life. Can you wonder at our gratitude? Sincerely yours,

MRS. EMMA GEDNEY."

150 West 128th St., New York, May 16, 1882.

"I have used AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL in my family for several years, and do not hesitate to pronounce it the most effectual remedy for coughs and colds we have ever tried. A. J. CRANE."

Lake Crystal, Minn., March 13, 1882.

"I suffered for eight years from Bronchitis, and after trying many remedies with no success, I was cured by the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. JOSEPH WALDEN."

Byhalia, Miss., April 5, 1882.

"I cannot say enough in praise of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, believing as I do that but for its use I should long since have died from lung troubles. F. BRAGDON."

Palestine, Texas, April 22, 1882.

No case of an affection of the throat or lungs exists which cannot be greatly relieved by the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and it will always cure when the disease is not already beyond the control of medicine.

Catarrh Can be Cured

That exceedingly disagreeable and very prevalent disease, catarrh, is caused by scrofulous taint in the blood. Hood's Sarsaparilla, by its powerful purifying and vitalizing action upon the blood, speedily removes the cause, and thus effects a radical and permanent cure of catarrh. Those who suffer from its varied symptoms—uncomfortable flow from the nose, offensive breath, ringing and bursting noises in the ears, swelling of the soft parts of the throat, nervous prostration, etc.—should take Hood's Sarsaparilla and be cured.

The Best Medicine

"I have suffered with catarrh in my head for years, and paid out hundreds of dollars for medicines, but have heretofore received only temporary relief. I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla and now my catarrh is nearly cured, the weakness of my body is all gone, my appetite is good—in fact, I feel like another person. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best medicine I have ever taken." MRS. A. CUNNINGHAM, Providence, R. I.

Serious consequences are liable to ensue if catarrh is not attended to in season. The disease frequently destroys the sense of smell and often developes into bronchitis or pulmonary consumption. Undoubtedly many cases of consumption originate in catarrh. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures catarrh and has even effected remarkable cures of consumption itself, in its early stages. A book containing statements of many cures by Hood's Sarsaparilla, will be sent free to all who send address to C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Catarrh and Impure Blood

"Hood's Sarsaparilla has helped me more for catarrh and impure blood than anything else I ever used." A. HALL, Syracuse, N. Y.

"I suffered three years with catarrh, and my general health was poor in consequence. When I took Hood's Sarsaparilla I found I had the right remedy. The catarrh is yielding, as Hood's Sarsaparilla is cleansing my blood, and the general tone of my system is improving." FRANK WASHBURN, Rochester, N. Y.

THE SLIPPERY MAN.

Bob Burdette Relieves His Mind by Calling One of the Breed a Few Hard Names.

My son, I was not born in the lap of luxury. I didn't roll in affluence in my earlier days. Within the memory of men standing, and some of the men now lying within the sound of my voice my check for $50,000 would have lain dormant in the waste-basket in any bank in the land. I did not always dress like a head waiter, or wear diamonds like a clog-dancer. Ah, no. I was poor once myself.

And one time, when I was very poor and comparatively honest, a prominent merchant whose books were adorned by my name was very anxious to send me his autograph at the complimentary end of a receipted bill. I was at that time an enthusiast on the subject of business men's autographs, and had amassed quite a varied collection, including those of well-known characters and operators in the butchering, grocerying, tailoring and shoe-making walks of life. I was quite anxious to add to my collection the autograph of the merchant above referred to, but he held it at what I then considered a very high figure, $65.80. I did not feel justified in paying such an amount for a single autograph. Moreover, I learned through confidential sources, that the particular autograph he was anxious to sell me was not in high demand among autograph hunters, and I hoped it would come down a little.

But it didn't. I received one day a violent and abusive letter from a merchant, in which he accused me of intending to defraud and swindle him; said that I had entered my name upon his valuable books for that purpose, and threatened all sorts of dire things if I didn't come to taw and buy that autograph of him. Then he once more called me a swindler, and signed himself "Yours respectfully."

I hustled around, my boy, for the next week or two, to get that autograph. I wrote until my fingers were numb and I was in ink to the eyes. I got the money—Heaven knows how I got so much money in two weeks in those days. I paid it over to that prominent merchant. I got his autograph on a receipted bill, he thanked me graciously, and—

The next day the hoary-headed old cuss failed, and paid his creditors thirty-three cents on the dollar.

No wonder the old rascal signed himself "Yours, respectfully," when he called me a swindler.

And here I had gone and paid the old gouge $65.80, when by his own rules and practice I should have paid him but $21.93. He was just collecting every cash cent on his books to salt away before he swindled his creditors.

I couldn't understand it then, and I don't understand it now, why the small debtor should be deprived of the privileges that accrue to the big one. You can't understand it either, my boy. It is one of the profound mysteries of our modern civilization. I sometimes wish I had the $44 I overpaid that old wretch, and yet, I don't suppose, at least I hope it would not make me happy. I think it makes me much happier to sit down and expose his rascality and call him names in print. But even that happiness is marred by the thought that he doesn't care for that. His creditors called him worse names than I can think of, and he really did me no wrong. It was a just bill; I owed it; I was in honor bound to pay it, and I did pay it, one hundred cents on the dollar, but what makes me mad as a hornet every time I think of it, was the old thief's virtuous indignation when he was afraid he wasn't going to get my $65 to fail with. This also is vanity.

Well, the same thing happens in this Christian land every day, my boy. There is, so far as I can see, as little honor in commercial circles as there is in politics. And then again, there is just as much. Tammany Hall is as honest as Wall street. About the only man who pays one hundred cents on the dollar is the man who owes less than $100. And, if occasionally he pays 0 on the dollar he has only learned his lesson from the great commercial schools where the small dealer sits at the feet of the great operators and learns all the knavery and cunning he knows.

What I started out to say, my boy, was this: If you are in debt, carry yourself calmly as the great houses do. If you owe a merchant $65, don't be in too big a hurry to pay it. Just let him sweat over it a little while, until you see how much he is going to pay on his own debts. Then you can pro rate with him. I am afraid that is the inference you have already drawn from this rather ill-natured reminiscence.

But, on second thought, I don't want you to do that way. You want to reform this great evil, do you not? Well, the best way to bring about that reform is to walk up and pay that $65 you owe, just the first minute you can collar the money. If you owe it to a rascal, never mind, it is a just debt on your part, and don't keep the conscience of the "assignment" operator. You pay 100 cents on the dollar every time. Then, by and by, as you and your neighbors do this and teach your children so to do, there will arise a generation of men in America who will pay one hundred cents on the dollar, and Canada will become a howling wilderness, untenanted save by the wild bear and the wolf, who will help the wilderness howl.

Bank cashiers will sleep at home and confidential clerks will spend their vacations in town, and a man's salary will pay for everything he gets. But the only way to bring about this preparatory millenium, my boy, is for you to pay that $65 when you owe it every cent of it. No matter how much the other man owes nor how little he pays. You pay your debts, my dear boy, and I will know at least one man to whom I won't be afraid to loan money without collateral security or gilt-edged paper.

"And have I quite forgiven the merchant against whom I felt so bitterly because he collected a just debt?"

Oh! That old fence? Well, no; to tell the honest truth, I haven't quite entirely forgiven him. But one of these days may be I'll meet him in the woods, far from human gaze and hearing, with a big club in my hands. After that I will forgive him. To prove my forgiveness, I will help him to the hospital.

THE HUMAN BLOOD WORM.

A Parasite to Whose Presence in the Human System Death May Often Be Directly Traced.

This parasite, the Filaria Bancroft of Cobbold—Filaria sanguinis hominis of some authors—is second only to the dreaded Trichina spiralis in its interest, producing as it does a long list of diseases in the human system, some of which frequently prove fatal.

The male worm is unknown; the female presents the following characters: Body hair-like, smooth, and of uniform thickness. The head is furnished with a circular mouth without papillæ. The neck is narrow, and the tail blunt. The reproductive outlet is situated close to the head, and the anus just above the extreme tip of the tail. Length, three inches. The embryos attain a length of one two-hundredths inch, and the ova measure about one one-thousandth inch from pole to pole.

The embryo form of the blood filaria was first discovered by Wanchrer in Bahia, in 1866, in chylous urine from a female patient in the Misericordia Hospital there; and six years later Lewis found the embryos in human blood, as well as in chylous urine, and in several organs of the body, notably the kidneys. As an instance of the enormous numbers of this parasite which sometimes infest the human body, the latter author calculated in one case that 140,000 filariae were present in the blood of a single unfortunate patient.

The habitat of the adult parasite above described is the alimentary tract of man. Here fecundation takes place, and, finally, scores of embryos of a worm-like form, and measuring one two-hundredths inch in length, are extruded from the reproductive outlet of the female. These make their way into the blood, and there produce some or all of the following list of symptoms: Chyluria, bloody urine (hæmaturia), wandering muscular pains, elephantiasis—a very common symptom, occurring in more than one-half of all cases—leprosy, and various forms of lymphatic abscess, anæmia, and general ill health, ending frequently in complete destruction of the vital powers and death.

The Filaria Bancrofti has been found in Egypt, Australia, China, India, and South America, and doubtfully in several European countries, and in the Southern United States; certainly, of the ready possibility of the disease being introduced into any temperate or tropical climate there can be no doubt.

In Bahia and in Brazil generally the blood filaria is especially common, 8 1-3 per cent. of the entire population of Bahia, it has been calculated, at some period of their lives harboring this parasite.

Nothing could be more interesting than the mode of propogation of this species of filaria. It is well known that the class of entozoa generally must go through at least one stage of their metamorphoses outside the body of their host, frequently within the body of another animal, and at first sight it is difficult to imagine how this can take place in the case of a parasite which inhabits human blood; but the subject has been entirely cleared up by the laborious investigations of Manson, Lewis, Cobbold, and others. The female mosquito, after gorging itself with blood, repairs to some pool of stagnant water, there to digest its meal, and finally deposit its eggs. Should the victim of the mosquito have been a person whose blood contained filariæ, these parasites are sucked into the digestive tract of the insect, and during the period while its sanguinary meal is being digested the embryos there undergo marked changes, finally developing a four-lipped mouth, and becoming cylindrical in shape, with an abrupt, sharply-pointed tail. When they have attained the proper stage of development they abandon their insect host and take up their abode in the stagnant water. Should a single pair of these microscopic larvæ be introduced into the digestive tract of man through drinking water containing them, or by eating water plants to which they had adhered, they rapidly develop into mature specimens of Filaria Bancrofti, and, fecundation having taken place, a new brood of embryos are produced to populate the blood, cause the diseases above mentioned, and form a new center of this hideous disease.

As the parasite under discussion can only be propagated through the agency of the mosquito or nearly allied blood-sucking insects, it is evident that if the race of mosquitoes were exterminated blood filaria disease would very soon cease to exist; but such a proposition needs only to be stated to show its absurdity, and the only practicable method of preventing the disease is to avoid taking the larvæ into the stomach, by the use of only carefully filtered water—except, of course, where a spring of pure water is the immediate source of supply—or of that which has been raised to the boiling point before being used for drinking or culinary purposes; a temperature considerably below 212 degrees being absolutely fatal to this worm in all its stages of development.

The treatment of blood filaria disease is exceedingly unsatisfactory, no known mode of procedure having any great influence over the progress of the disease; a decoction of mangrove bark is a tropical remedy of great repute; gallic acid has been used with asserted benefit by European practitioners. Fortunately, however, the symptoms appear to be to some extent self-limiting. The percentage of deaths in case of blood filaria disease, calculating from published records, is not high; but this is owing more to the insidious nature of the pathological condition than to its harmlessness to life, death frequently occurring suddenly in the course of the disorder from some acute disease, the latter always running its course rapidly, and often to a fatal termination when the constitution has been broken down by the ravages of filaria. Death may be often traced directly to the presence of this parasite in the blood and it is certain that all severe attacks of blood filaria disease markedly injure general health and shorten life.—Ralph W. Seiss, M. D., in Scientific American.

Do you wish freedom from aches, pains, sores, etc.? Then purify the blood, strengthen the uniary and digestive organs, build up your broken down constitution by using Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla. It is gratifying to know that among intelligent communities this simple, harmless, yet effective remedy sells faster than many humbug bitters, iron medicines and pretended kidney cures, all of which so rapidly weaken and ruin the stomach, liver, bowels, and kidneys by exciting these delicate organs to unnatural activity.

GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS are the great blood purifier, liver and kidney remedy and life giving principle, a perfect renovator and invigorator of the system carrying away all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition, enriching it, refreshing and invigorating both mind and body. They are easy of administration, prompt in their action, certain in their results, safe and reliable in all forms of disease. Every moment of our lives, every part of our bodies, is wearing out and is being built up anew. This work is accomplished by the blood. The blood if pure makes the entire circuit of the body every seven minutes. But if it becomes weak or vitiated and does not perform its work properly the system is actually poisoned by the worn-out matter clogging the vital organs instead of leaving the body. Cleanse the blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, sores etc. Keep the liver in order, the blood pure, health of the system will follow. Take GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS and no other. Sold by Baker & Hall and C. A. Wright & Co.

Weather prophet Wiggins is again on deck.

Vennor prophesied an open winter and a green Christmas and then died

There seems to be a lull in the Adrian postoffice war. Let'er lull. The people can stand it.

Resounds again to young and old:
St. Nick, he bids us all good cheer,
For Christmas comes but once a year.

Nearly every state in the Union has a candidate for a position in the new Cabinet, and some have three or four. Michigan has not spoken yet. Michigan is too modest.

Wiggins presistently affirms that he has not joined the Salvation Army. Very well, but he certainly ought to. Such an incorrigible old sinner is surely in need of reformation.

The newspapers are busily engaged in constructing cabinets for Governor Cleveland. The man who gives himself the least trouble on this subject seems to be Gov. Cleveland himself.

The sugar interests are opposed to the Spanish treaty, the tobacco interests are opposed to it, the tax-payers are opposed to it. It is safe to say that it will be left to die a natural death.

A. J. Rawson, of Chicago, has issued a circular, announcing the startling intelligence that this world is coming to end on Sunday, January 4th, 1885. The insurance companies should have known this fact before issuing their calendars for the coming year.

Strikes are very expensive luxuries sometimes. The Columbus board of trade estimates the loss to the coal companies of the strike in the Hocking valley at $1,620,000, the loss to business men outside of the companies at $350,000, to the railroads centering there at $1,710,000, to the furnaces in the valley at $225,000 and to the city of Columbus at $3,511,000. What did the strikers gain by it?

President elect Cleveland has made a good beginning by declining all gifts. Some time since he returned a valuable Newfoundland dog to the donor. Last week one Coughlin, of Binghamton, sent him a five gallon cask of wine, with a gold faucet, and enclosed in a plush-lined walnut case. The gift was promptly returned, and the Governor in his letter says—"My election to office merely obliges me to perform the duties of such office for the compensation allowed. I thought I made my desires on this subject very plain in my recent letter, and I think I must have my way in the matter." It is not likely that he will be subjected to any further annoyance in this direction.

TEMPERANCE AND PROHIBITION.

EDITOR HERALD.—

In your paper of Dec. 18th, I find a communication signed VERBUM SAP, in which the writer discusses the question of "partisan temperance." The article is evidently writen by one who is no tyro in the business and deserves more than a passing notice. "Is the subject of temperance and temperance legislation properly and legitimately a party question?" he asks. He claims to be a "prohibitionist of the prohibitionists," to believe that "no men or set of men can have the moral right to enforce what God has expressly forbidden" and then he opposes any separate party action, having for its object the enactment and enforcement of prohibitory laws.

Your correspondent has fallen into the very common error of confounding two things, which, although of the same generic character, are yet radically different. Is temperance properly and legitimately a party question? Assuredly not. Is temperance legislation or prohibition a legimate party question? Most emphatically it is. Let me illustrate this distinction farther.

Temperance, as defined by Webster, is an "habitual moderation in regard to the indulgence of the natural appetites and passions." Temperance, however, in the most generally accepted sense of that term, means a total abstinence from the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage. But this question—temperance pure and simple—has nothing to do with legislation. Men of all parties and sects advocate temperance. Men who believe in legal prohibition, those who favor high license and low license and no license are found in the ranks of total abstainers. "Moral Suasion" is the instrumentality used to promote temperance of this character. The sole object of temperance reform of this type is to pursuade drinkers to stop drinking, and to induce all men to refrain therefrom. This theory was the basis of the old Washingtonian movement and was the corner stone of faith in the Sons of Temperance and the Red Ribbon clubs. Temperance in this acceptation of the word, is not a party question at all. It is a personal and social question. It appeals to men's reason and judgment and through social organizations furnishes aid to the fallen, to reform and refrain from intoxicating drinks. It needs no legislation and asks none. Whether the state has a prohibitory law or a license law or no law, this reform goes on the same, gathering its converts through the agency of moral suasion alone. I conclude, therefore, that temperance, in the proper sense of that term, is not, and cannot be, a party or political question.

Now, let me ask your correspondent, Why is he a prohibitionist?

His answer, I apprehend, would be substantially this. Because the experience of years has demonstrated the fact that moral suasion alone is powerless to eradicate the evil of intemperance. The liquor interest has grown to be an immense power. It can only be curtailed and regulated by the strong arm of the law. Fighting it with the weapons of moral suason alone is like an attempt to storm a modern fortress with pop guns and Indian arrows. The liquor men smile and go on their way rejoicing. What is the remedy? The enactment and enforcement of a wise prohibitory law. This premise granted, what next? When you talk of prohibition you necessarily talk of legislation, for without legislation there can be no prohibition. The very essence of prohibition is statutory law. But how—in the name of St. Paul and all the prophets—can a prohibitory law be enacted and enforced, without a party organization behind it to push it forward and promote its success? Great reforms are not accomplished by no-partyism. All parties worthy of the name are based on some moral or political principle. Every reform has a humble beginning and is of slow growth. The seed is first sown in isolated localities, then grows and spreads among the people; a definite political dogma is formulated; separate detachments of reformers combine into a party; this party unfurls the reform banner, sends its representatives to our legislative halls and thus weaves the reformation sought and fought for into statutory law. Was any great reform in this world ever accomplished in any other manner? Did any reform ever succeed by toadying to the men who oppose it? Did any reform army ever win a battle by mustering out its own leaders, disbanding its organization and scattering its rank and file among the hostile forces?

In conclusion, I affirm that temperance legislation, whether in the form of license, tax or prohibition, is, and necessarily must be, a party and a political question.
